No Halloween For Castro St.??

Violence, No Insurance May Force CUAV to Pull Monitors

by Allen White

Fears of increased violence and loss of insurance for street patrols by Community United Against Violence (CUAV) may spell the end for Halloween festivities on Castro Street. CUAV announced this week that the organization may have no monitors on Castro this Halloween because "we can no longer, in good conscience, put our people at risk against armed individuals."

LaRouche Pushes Disinformation

Reporting Names And Quarantining Among The Messages

by George Mendenhall

Dr. John Grauerholz, "medical coordinator" for the YES ON 64 campaign, told the media this week his group will be mailing 3-5 million copies of a magazine-size, 22-page brochure. Bay Area Reporter obtained an advance copy of the booklet titled "A Vote for Proposition 64 Could Save The Life of Someone In Your Family." Grauerholz said the YES effort is short of funds but a selective mailing of at least 1.5 million will most likely go to those who signed the initiative's petitions (700,000) and those on LaRouche mailing lists.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Numerous charts and maps are scattered through the document which begins with a first page statement by political gadfly Lyndon LaRouche. The first sentence is a blatant lie and sets the alarmist tone of what is to follow: "Every leading medical institution in the United States and Western Europe knows that the deadly disease called AIDS is spread by casual contact." LaRouche also stresses there is a conspiracy ("the most evil cover-up in medical history") to keep the public uninformed, but he does not indicate what motive the conspirators have. He said AIDS can be spread by "infected droplets through the air" and by "biting insects."

The "reasonable" LaRouche calls for large sums of public money to be spent on "public health measures," adequate care for those with AIDS, and a "crash program" of medical research to develop better treatment and a cure. He says this will require at least $2 billion a year nationally. This money can be found if America "cleans up the drug-epidemic" and "stops wasting occaine and other drugs at Hollywood parties."

The brochure includes numerous statements by LaRouche supporters, including six medical doctors. There are charts predicting the future increase in loween intensified. Over 100 weapons were confiscated by police including knives, bats, loaded guns and machetes. Many of the weapons were part of the Rambo and Road Warrior type costumes. There were so many weapons taken by police that sev eral times the officers exhausted their supply of property receipts given to people when weapons are taken.

Further compounding the problem has been the inability of the Muni transit management to plan for the closure of Castro Street. For the last two years, the 24-Divisadero bus line has come to a stop for over an hour and a half when the street closed. The route drops hundreds of youths from the Western Addition and Hunters Point in the Castro. Because the electrified trolley stops when the street closes, the youths can't get out of the area.

Last year, even the under-ground Muni Metro System ceased to operate because of mechanical problems. For a substantial period of time the Castro Muni station was closed because of fear of vandalism and violence.

If the transit system comes to a stop in the Castro, police and CUAV are concerned that vio-lence will erupt in the crowd. The serious problem for law enforce-ment officials is that they can't tell people to go home if there is no transportation.

This year, Halloween is on a Friday night. Several schools have Friday evening events and it is feared that large groups will arrive in the Castro, many looking for trouble.

CUAV described Halloween in the Castro as "a night when literally thousands of lesbians and gay men are 'open targets' for hundreds of homophobic in-dividuals who descend to gawk, throw insults and physically assault us."

Another factor in the reluc-tance of CUAV to deploy moni-tors is the organization's inability to gain insurance for its volun-teers in the streets. "In the event of injury or death to a staff or volunteer, CUAV is completely without liability coverage," they

Community leaders and the police strongly state that gay men and lesbians should make plans to avoid the Castro this Halloween. There will be several private parties on Halloween night. There will also be parties at many hars throughout the city. bars throughout the city.

The single will be followed by the release of a new album, Mutual Attraction, on Nov. 8. The November release date was planned to allow the album heavy promotion during the busy Christmas sales season.

The concept for the album was presented to Warner Bros. as a total package and Sylvester's manager, Tim McKenna, said the company gave them everything they wanted.

U.S. Court Bops CIA On Gay Firing

Rules that Agency Must Prove Firing Man Was 'Necessary'

The U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, D.C. has ruled that the CIA has the burden to prove that firing a gay undercover employee, pursuant to a policy of barring all gays from CIA employment, was "necessary or advisable in the interests of the United States."

The Court of Appeals rejected to CIA's claim that it had the absolute discretion to fire employees for security reasons with-out any review by the courts. But the Court also found that the judgment of the CIA director was entitled to "great deference" because of the "sensitive nature of (his) decisions . . . concerning removal of employees." The appeals court ordered the case remanded to the trial court for determination of exactly why the man was fired.

The plaintiff informed the CIA that he was gay in 1982. He filed suit, represented by the ACLU National Security Project, after the CIA first conducted a three-month investigation procedure and then fired him. He used the pseudonym John Doe for the law-suit, not because of his homosexuality, but because of his under-

During the inquiry, Doe was examined for ten hours by a CIA polygraph officer who later reported that he had answered all questions truthfully. The answers included statements that he had not had sexual relations with any foreign nationals and had not disclosed classified information to any sexual partners.

At one point prior to the firing, a CIA lawyer stated that homo-sexuality did not inevitably lead to firing. But the agency provided no explanation for why it terminated Doe's employment two months later, other than that it was "necessary and advisable."

Pro-Gay Challengers Battle For Spot on KQED Board

Tiano Cuts Short Meeting With Molinari; Refuses to Discuss Community Issues

Members of KQED began receiving their ballots this week to elect a new board of directors for the public broadcasting stations. Of the four candidates running against the station management's slate, two have emerged as pro-gay. Henry Kroll and Joel Fort say they favor expanded gay programming as part of KQED's commitment to Bay Area minority communities.

Meanwhile, San Francisco Sup. John Molinari met with KQED general manager Anthony Tiano finally on Sept. 30. Unfortunately, there was little dialogue between the two because Tiano cut the meeting short.

"They were not forthcoming," Molinari said of Tiano and KQED media spokesperson Holly Hartz, after their meeting at the supervisor's office. "The meeting could be characterized at best as brief. Mr. Tiano informed me that they felt they had a First Amendment right in this matter (broadcasting Monitoradio) and he didn't wish to discuss the matter any further." Molinari said he saw a prob-

I would have expected that the public affairs director and general manager of the leading public radio and TV station in the area would be a little more open to the general public."

Molinari told the Bay Area

Molinari told the Bay Area Reporter that KQED got over $150,000 from the city's Hotel Tax Fund last year and is scheduled for more grants in the future. "I think when it's time to give them those funds we can question whether any organization that is in violation of the city's human rights ordinance should be getting money from the city."

Molinari also said he is still looking at the possibility of the Board of Supervisors holding hearings on KQED's problems with the city's minority com-

BOARD ELECTIONS

Those problems have erupted Those problems have erupted in the election of directors for KQED. Two challengers running for the KQED board, Henry Kroll and Dr. Joel Fort, both support the goal of more gay oriented programming on the public TV and radio stations.

"The basic problem at KQED," said Kroll, a former board member and an independent businessman, "is that the management and the board are not accountable and have avoidlarge. They have skirted their responsibility to serve the total community. And their programming is largely a pass-through of PBS programming that's available on every PBS station in California."

On Monitoradio, Kroll had this to say. "KQED as a public institution has no business supporting any show that discriminates on the basis of religion, race or sexual orientation. And I think it is very important for the gay community to get somebody on the munity to get somebody on the board who is sensitive to its con-

Kroll said that KQED once put on a thousand hours of local news coverage a year but today only does one weekly half-hour program, Express, covering local issues of concern to people in the Bay Area. "The change at the station is exemplified by the loss in recent years of a score of radio programs that were aimed at ethnic communities in the Bay Area," said Kroll.

Kroll last ran for the board of directors at KQED in 1985 and won 28,000 votes. The next largest vote-getter ahead of Kroll won a seat on the board with 33,000 votes. Kroll is hopeful of winning this time.

Dr. Joel Fort, the other pro-gay challenger, is a public health physician and a faculty member at Golden Gate University. Fort was also an early supporter of gay rights. He was an honorary member and consultant for SIR, one of the earliest gay rights organizations in San Francisco, and was an honorary member of the Daughters of Bilitis as well.

"I think it's a very elitist and undemocratic board," said Fort of the KQED board of directors. "I feel they should do a lot more local programming which is al-most totally absent now with the

Singing A New Song

Chorus Ushers in Eighth Year With Renewed Spirit, New Music

by Allen White

The San Francisco Gay Men's Chorus has concluded eight years of making music with renewed spirit. Their concert Saturday night, Oct. 4, at the First Congregational Church was the first classical concert under the direction of Gregg Tallman.

Tallman took over as director of the chorus last October with his first concert last Christmas. Since that time he has worked to develop the talents of the 90 member group. The group has been improving throughout the year. With that improvement has come a new spirit for the chorus.

"The morale is wonderful," said Tallman. Indeed, many who attended their Gay Freedom Day concerts noticed a new sense of maturity and freedom by the singers.

The San Francisco Gay Men's Chorus has decided to go on tour this year. It is the first time since their historic national tour in 1981. July 1, the group appeared with the Portland Gay Men's Chorus in Oregon. July 3 they opened the GALA convention in Minneapolis. They were one of sixteen gay and lesbian choruses to perform there.

Their opening of the convention was appropriate. The chorus was founded in October, 1978 by Jon Sims. Under their first permanent director, Dick Kramer, the chorus developed into one of the most respected gay musical groups in the country. They have inspired other groups to perform throughout the world.

In 1981, the chorus embarked on a tour of major cities throughout the United States. This included appearances at Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. and other noted concert halls. Their return to San Francisco was greeted by a huge crowd closing the streets at 18th and Castro. They performed to a sold out crowd at Davies Hall and were given the key to the city by Mayor Dianne Feinstein.

With their return came the realization that the chorus had a debt from the tour of almost $250,000. Since that time the chorus has had to live under the cloud of the debt. On Aug. 1, 1987 the chorus must come up with a $60,000 balloon mortgage payment. This will be the last payment for the tour debt.

To make this payment the chorus has planned an intensive fundraising effort for the next ten months. Significantly, as they start this drive, less than ten people in the chorus were members when the tour was made five years ago.

Tallman said the chorus has planned three primary fundraising efforts. He said there will be a concert in March to feature the chorus and a well known star at Davies Hall. They will also repeat the banquet effort they presented last February. Finally, Tallman said a new community organization is being set up to help the chorus raise money.

The chorus is also cutting their concert expenditures to the minimum. Their concert Saturday night was at the First Congregational Church where expenses are minimal and acoustics are excellent. Tallman said that church officials have extended a warm welcome and have said they are proud to have the chorus call the church their home.

The Christmas concert, one of the most popular gay musical events of the year, will be held this year at Mission High School. Tallman noted that the concert at Davies Hall will also serve as a fundraiser. Many, he said, believe that the chorus needs the prestige generated by a Davies Hall performance to raise funds.

The new director of the San Francisco Gay Men's Chorus said, "I feel that we have a purpose in the gay community that is unspoken." He elaborated that the chorus, by its mere presence, serves as a symbol of strength and leadership for the community. Acknowledging the AIDS health crisis, he noted that the chorus also helps give the community "a reason to keep on going."

He acknowledged that the chorus can't reach everyone. "We are probably too square for many," he said. Noting that the chorus doesn't do rock, he said many may have stayed away from the Saturday night concert because they found the music too classical.

At the same time, the music is searched out by many others. Last Saturday night the concert called, Presenting the Classics, featured music by Gabrielli, Monteverdi, Schubert and Janacek. The concert will also feature the world premiere of Invocation and Dance, a work commissioned by the chorus. The music is by David Conte. The text is by Walt Whitman from his poem, "When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard

IF YOU THINK THERE'S NO WAY LYNDON LAROUCHE CAN WIN, THINK AGAIN.

Proposition 64, sponsored by Lyndon LaRouche and his political cult, exploits the fears and myths about AIDS that many people share. Supporters of Prop 64 are sending millions of brochures and planning TV commercials to frighten Californians into voting their way.

Polls show that nearly half of the state's voters still have not decided how to vote on this dangerous proposition. Yet many in our community seem to think there's no way we can lose.

Much of the public is uninformed about and afraid of AIDS. Voters could easily be misled, by a desire to "do something," into doing something that would only make matters worse.

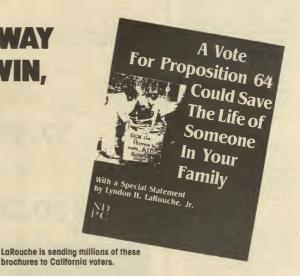

Virtually every major political, medical, religious, business and labor leader is against Prop 64. But the NO on 64 campaign must have the ability to communicate this to undecided voters. We're united and well-organized—our greatest weakness is the mistaken assumption among our supporters that their extra effort isn't necessary because LaRouche can't win.

Don't make the mistake of thinking your help isn't needed in the coming weeks. Over $2 million must still be raised for a media campaign to counteract the public fear and the LaRouche lies. Use the coupon below to contribute your money or your time. And be sure to vote on November 4th!

Maher Attacks Drug Test Law As Unconstitutional

by Charles Linebarger

San Francisco Sup. Bill Maher is pissed off. After laboring last year to get legislation passed that prohibits drug testing of employees, Maher may see his work undone by a proposed state law that would permit such testing. Senate Bill 2175, authored by state Sen. John Seymour of Anaheim, would supersede Maher's city ordinance. Seymour will be holding hearings in San Francisco next week on his bill and Maher plans to raise the constitutional issues involved.

"What the hell is the former mayor of Anaheim doing trying to tell San Francisco how to run its affairs;" Maher told B.A.R. "Why is there this sudden need to override local legislation?"

The local law Maher was referring to is the San Francisco ordinance passed last November banning drug tests of employees in the city. The ordinance was passed by the Board of Supervisors and although never signed by Mayor Dianne Feinstein, went into effect on Jan. 1 this year.

"This is the first bill that I've seen that says you can't grant more civil rights to your people even if your city government thinks it's appropriate. And why the hell do they think they need a state-wide standard anyway? I think this whole craze to invade your body is unconstitutional. If they can invade your body, what can they look for? Can they (invade it) to see if you're carrying a disease that could affect the company health plan?

"I think it's very important for people to tell Seymour to bug off," added Maher.

Maher acknowledged that Seymour's bill does have a chance of passage in the current political climate on drugs. "Three months ago I would have said he was dead in the water but then the President decided to take a urine test. Then the attorney general said that no constitutional issues were involved. And finally, the First Lady said we have to give up our individual rights to fight drugs. The President of the United States taking a tinkle in a bottle is unnecessary as far as I'm concerned."

S.B. 2175 is still in the state Senate's Industrial Relations Committee and Maher told the B.A.R. that he hopes it has as hard a time getting out of committee this year as it had last year. Until the committee passes the bill onto the Senate floor, the legislature will not have the opportunity to vote on the measure.

"I think this is absolutely insane," Maher explained. "Can you imagine lining up everyone in a room and saying, 'OK, take a tinkle,' and then saying that that doesn't violate anyone's constitutional rights. If that doesn't violate our constitutional rights then something is wrong."

Maher then compared the constitutional safeguards protecting a citizen accused of a crime which entails a $500 fine as compared to the lack of protection for the citizen who could see his/her career ruined by a drug test.

"Is it any less threatening to see your entire career ruined in one morning than it is to have to pay a $500 fine?" asked the supervisor.

The hearings will be held at the State Building, 350 McAllister, Room 1202 on Tuesday, Oct. 14 from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m. The hearings are sponsored by a joint committee of the Senate's Select Committee on Drug and Alcohol Abuse and the

Aiming To Win

Pat Norman Came Close in '84; Now She Plans to be Supervisor

by Charles Linebarger

With less than thirty days remaining before the November elections, Pat Norman's campaign for a seat on the San Francisco Board of Supervisors is gaining the speed of a whirlwind. Her days are a hectic round of speeches and appearances as she struggles to gather the 90,000 votes she believes she needs to be elected the city's second gay supervisor.

"I believe the real issue is who runs San Francisco," Norman told the Bay Area Reporter in an interview on Oct. 5, "whether it's those of us who live here and have built this city or whether it is those people who control it by over-developing our city. I'm a person who deeply cares about the people of San Francisco."

Norman has experience in running for the office she now seeks. In 1984, she ran for supervisor and got 56,000 votes. She came in ninth in a field of 29 candidates that year. The third highest vote-getter among the challengers, she spent a total of $54,000 on that campaign, 23c a vote, an extremely modest campaign expenditure. Kevin Starr won 30,000 more votes that year with a budget in excess of $400,000.

One of the high profile items that Norman is basing her campaign on this year is Prop. M, a measure to control growth in San Francisco. Said Norman, "It's about the preservation of the neighborhoods, so that all of our small businesses don't get pushed out. It is an initiative that closes the loopholes and enables us in city government to support the city's master plan that calls for a limit on growth."

"Since 1970, we have lost 70,000 jobs and large numbers of minority and blue collar workers have had to leave the city," said Norman, "among them lesbian and gay people who have gone to the East Bay because they can no longer afford to live here. Our neighborhoods are changing as money comes in and forces out old local businesses with frauchises replacing them. And we are actually being pushed out of the South of Market area?"

Norman is now coordinator of Lesbian and Gay Health Services for the city health department. She grew up in Brooklyn, New York where her mother was a civil rights activist and arrived in San Francisco in 1971. She was a member of the original team of speakers going into San Francisco's high schools in 1971–72 to tell students about gay and lesbian lifestyles and has been involved in numerous local and national gay rights organizations up. Richard Hongisto has a long history of support for all minorities in this city. We first met Dick in the early '60s when we were picketing Grace Cathedral. He and another police officer (assigned to keep an eye on those heretics) talked to us. He was quite shocked to realize that all those well-dressed men and women picketing were queer. From that point forward he has concerned himself with our welfare.

He was then assigned to the newly created Community Relations unit in the S.F.P.D. He started attending many gay meetings including those of S.I.R. (Society for Individual Rights). He spoke up for this community before the Public Utilities Commission to urge them that gay and lesbian organizations should be allowed to advertise in the telephone directory yellow pages.

Richard was elected Sheriff of San Francisco by an impressive coalition of minorities. The gay vote finally turned out in mass. He defeated a sheriff who had been an institution and took over an organization that was yet to come out of the dark ages. He made far-reaching changes including aggressively recruiting gays and lesbians as deputy sheriffs. Many of those first few are still in the sheriff's department and several have risen through the ranks as officers respected by their peers.

up. Hongisto has always fought bigotry, from the infamous Briggs Initiative in 1978 to the current No on 64 Campaign. He has always been generous with both his time and money to help those causes he believes in.

Richard Hongisto is a rare breed in San Francisco politics, he was actually born and raised in this city.

He has always been outspoken and fights for what he believes in even though he has not always been successful. He wasn't able to break the corruption that permeated the Cleveland Police Department when he was that city's police chief. He was also feared by the same type of public officials when the governor of New York brought him back East to clean up that state's prison system. The legislature refused to confirm him due to pressure by the network that controlled the inhumane prison system.

He returned home and ran as an underdog candidate for the Board of Supervisors. He won by a narrow margin but it took a couple of days for the registrar of voters to confirm his election. He has served honorably this city's voters and citizens.

We as a community have much to thank him for. I urge you to give him a vote of confidence by re-electing Richard Hongisto supervisor.

State Propositions

THE GREEN-HUGHES BUILDING LEASE PURCHASE BOND

This general obligation $800 million bond issue would fund construction or improvement of existing public schools in California. Since the passage of Prop. 13, the public schools in many parts of California are unsafe, substandard or badly in need of repairs. This proposition deserves your support. VOTE YES.

NEW PRISON CONSTRUCTION BOND ACT

This proposition is basically the same bill that was rejected by the voters last time. It would build additional youth and adult correctional facilities in the state. It is a $500 million bond issue for building only with no additional funds for servicing these institutions. California already has a population of over 55,000 prisoners in its care. The law and order forces who are supporting this proposition would like to see that figure go as high as 75,000. It is actively being pushed by the governor. We strongly urge a NO vote.

CALIFORNIA SAFE DRINKING WATER BOND

A general obligation bond of $100 million to improve the water supply system to meet minimum drinking water standards. This is a good initiative that would help correct wrongs caused by big business and the private sector. It deserves your support, VOTE YES.

HIGHER EDUCATION FACILITIES BOND ACT OF 1986

This bill would provide a general obligation bond of $400 million to fund improvement or construction of California's institutions of higher education, the University of California, California State University and California Community Colleges. We feel that these improvements are necessary to allow our campuses to adapt and utilize new technology and keep in the forefront of public education. The measure reads well and should merit your support. VOTE YES.

NOTE: If the above four propositions pass, the state would take on an additional liability of one billion eight hundred million dollars.

RETIREMENT BENEFITS OF STATE OFFICERS

At long last, this constitutional amendment would correct the strange law that allows seven statewide elected officers and the four Board of Equalization members to have their retirement based on the compensation of their successors. We have several officials in retirement who make better salaries now than they did while in office. The bill is a start in the right direction, but it doesn't go far enough. It definitely needs your support. VOTE YES.

TAXATION: FAMILY TRANSFERS

This constitutional amendment would allow sale or transfer of property between spouses and between parents and children not to be reassessed. There is no provision for transfers of properties to heirs who are not blood-related (i.e., adopted children, long-time domestic partners or children born out of wedlock). This looks like an undermining of Prop. 13 again and the loss in revenue would reflect on less income to public school and community college districts. The loss of revenue is not provided for and would further deplete the state's general funds. A decidedly NO vote is urged.

ELECTED DISTRICT ATTORNEY

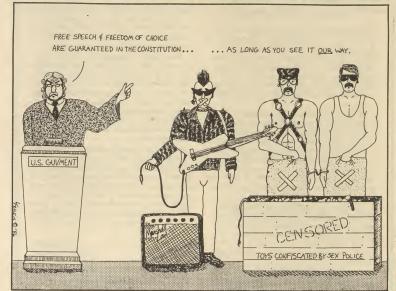

This is a constitutional amendment that would overturn a little known law that allows counties to appoint district attorneys. All of California's 58 counties now have elected district attorneys, but if the majority votes to have them appointed it can do so. This should not be allowed. Keep all district attorneys in the elected by majority mode. Let's not put more authority in the hands of the state. VOTE YES,

TAXATION: REPLACEMENT RESIDENCES

While we have some problems with this initiative, we think you should support it. If it works as written it would stop some of the injustices to some of our senior citizens. If you are over 55 years of age and sell a long-time owned property for a large profit you would not be penalized to have to pay a larger property tax. In many cases, seniors do this and plan on retiring on their windfall only to be caught up in higher reassessed property taxs on their new home. If within two years of the sale you buy another home for equal or lesser value, you could move your lower tax rate to it. It's a start. VOTE YES.

Yes on 'M'

★ In his Opinion opposing Prop. M Jim Haas pos-tulates that as gay San Franciscans, we must overlook the detrimental effect of excessive downtown develop-ment on our quality of life because we are dependent on highrise development for the jobs that allow us to move to San Francisco. He also suggests that the proponents of Prop. M are not really concerned about eliminating congestion but rather are homophobes disturbed by the large migration of gays. He further contends that the lack of office space has driven large corporations to move administrative and clerical jobs to the suburbs and that that trend will stop if we allow unlimited office development.

The theory sounds good, but I urge members of our community not to fall for it—it's just more of the developers' bull!

For years the developers have fed the same bull to the black community — that more highrise construc-tion is necessary to preserve the black population in tion is necessary to preserve the black population in the city. In fact only 1.8 percent of the jobs in new highrises have gone to SF blacks and during the period of greatest downtown development the black population decreased by 10,000 families. This time black Supervisor Willie Kennedy has seen through the smokescreen and is supporting Prop. M.

The truth is that lesbians and gays, like all San Franciscans, should be concerned that excessive downtown development has resulted in Muni 150 perdowntown development has resulted in Mum 130 per-cent over capacity, neighborhood parking consumed by commuters, rising rents for housing and small businesses, and the loss of open space. Only 8 per-cent of the jobs in new highrises have gone to SF residents and between 1970 and 1980 when we built over 15 million square feet of office buildings the over 15 million square feet of office buildings the number of employed San Franciscans fell by 17,730. Fewer new jobs go to San Franciscans than are lost when the old buildings are torn down — such as buildings South of Market where many small gay businesses are threatened. There are far more efficient and less costly ways of providing more jobs such as job training programs which Prop. M promotes.

The leaders of the Prop. M campaign include les-bian activist Pat Norman and some of the most pro-gressive, historically pro-gay straight activists in town. The exodus of clerical and administrative offices to The exodus of ciercial and administrative offices to the suburbs has resulted from a number of factors and even if we allowed developers to build with no restrictions in SF, office space would still be cheaper in outlying suburbs with acres of vacant land. Also, we currently have an office vacancy rate of over 15

The survival of the gay population in San Francisco does not depend on ruining the quality of life in our neighborhoods. Don't buy the developers' bull — vote yes on M!

Reagan's Disregard

★ The following telegram was sent to the White House on Oct. 2:

Dear President Reagan,

I vehemently condemn your sick and insensitive remarks about Moammar Khadafy, San Francisco, and AIDS. You surely deserve to be tried by a Peo-ple's Court for crimes against humanity.

Martin Hill San Francisco Was I surprised? No. Angry? Extremely! Once again our government leaders have shown their ut-ter disregard for the gay and lesbian community. As little as they value the life of Khadafy, they associate us with him (and terrorists) and therefore give the message out that we are not valuable and our lives mean nothing.

This attitude given out for all Americans to hear only reinforces the hatred against us. And it only fuels the kind of prejudice that will help Lyndon LaRouche to pass Prop. 64.

We must unite now more than ever to fight for our rights as human beings and citizens of Amerikka. We can send a message to Washington that the people of California will not be fooled by the lies and the hatred of the LaRouche campaign. No on Prop. 64! Everyone to the polls on Nov. 4! Stop LaRouche!

Obituary Policy

★ As a person just coming out into the gay world the AIDS epidemic has been a tremendous hin-drance to my emotional development. There is a fear of experiencing life and a fear of not experiencing life that leaves me very confused. One positive sign, though, to come out of AIDS has been the support and unity the gay communty has shown the victims.

This is one of our darkest hours and still the Chronicle hasn't seen fit to run the 'gay obituaries,' so this responsibility falls to the gay papers. For many of the AIDS victims the obituary will be their final mark on this planet. This is not a time for B.A.R. to place a "200-word, no poetry" limitation on the obituaries. This is a time for warmth and understanding. If there is a space problem within the paper I think you should cut the space from another sec-tion other than the obituaries or simply add another page to the paper.

The gay community needs this service and I don't think B.A.R. should become calloused to our brothers and sisters. The rest of the world does enough of that already.

Gordon L. Goode

ED. NOTE: B.A.R. publishes more column inches of gay obituaries per week than any paper in the United States. The restrictions, we feel, should not prevent anyone from expressing warmth for a loved one. The restrictions have been forced on us for reasons: [1] tions have oeen forced on us for reasons: 11 we are already holding back too many stories for lack of space and (2) with our current size, we cannot "simply add an extra page." We would have to add an entire section.

We have to reject poetry because of the structural nature of poetry. One recent poem, to cite one example, would have taken up roughly 20 column inches. We repret these restrictions, but we do provide this as a public service and we still do allow more freedom of expression, than any American publication. expression than any American publication.

★ Dear Cassandra Erin Cooke; Thank you so m for your critical, complimentary and insightful let-ter to John Canalli and the Gay Cable Network, con-cerning the prominent lack of issues relevant to lesbians and women of color on the show. We, at the respians and women of color on the show. We, at the network, are just as concerned about our "vanilla" image, and are eager to find women of all colors and capabilities willing to commit their time and talents to the show.

We are a diverse community, and we therefore seek to represent all the positive shades of our spectrum, but we need your support. We welcome letters from you telling us of events or concerns which you might deem newsworthy. We have a limited time frame, and must be discerning about the material and segments we choose to air. Perhaps in the future, with more funding through advertisement sales, we could afford more airtime, therefore including more seg-

The suggestions which you shared for segments (SOL's, Russian River Scene, lesbian health concerns) are all terrific ideas. In addition, let's not create more divisiveness within our community by being overly critical of our "drags." I think they are only offen-sive if you take them seriously, and God knows, even Again, thanks for your viewership, and for speaking out with concern for the Gay Cable Network. We are San Francisco's only weekly gay TV show, and as such, we are setting precedence. With more financial backing and our core of committed individuals, we'll soon be rivaling other local news and entertainment shows.

Suggestions Are Welcomed

★ I've been interested in the response of the com-munity to the Gay Cable Network, both because I'm involved in those productions and because I think our support of such an enterprise is important to our thriving as a lesbian and gay community. I'm inter-ested in Cassandra Erin Cooke's comments in parested in Cassandra Erin Cooke s committees in particular because they express a thoughtful criticism of the network: she affirms GCN's efforts and calls for less one-dimensional programming. My experiences with the producers, the crew, and the performers convince me that their concerns are precisely those of Cassandra Cooke and to my mind the shows are already beginning to reflect those concerns.

I've found the people at the Gay Cable Network committed to responsible programming, hard work, and good cheer. I've also found a lot of desire there for suggestions from the community; I urge us all to let GCN know what we'd like to see and what we feel we need from such a show. I predict an open and energetic response to such feedback.

We have in the Gay Cable Network the beginnings of the realization of a dream for many of us: we see a lesbian and gay media effort as a unifying force for the community, as an outlet for our tren creative expression, and as a channel of information about our interests and our lives.

GCN is giving us a great start on just such unity, such expression, and such information. I hope we'll all support it with our viewing, our patronage, and our critical responses.

Yes on 'M'

★ James Haas' anti-stance on Prop. M (B.A.R., 10/2) is the more reason I will vote Yes on M on election day. Mr. Haas' statements give the impression that gentrification due to the rapidity of change of San Francisco is justified and that the forced exodus of residents from the city is inevitable. This type of warped logic is not acceptable and must be rejected by every conscientious San Franciscan who truly cares about the future of this city.

Opponents of Prop. M are still using the old, tired lip-service of how "highrises create jobs (sic) and bring new companies into the city to fill up those highrises" (sic). But what they don't tell us is that all of those highrises built in the last few years are standing there empty (read: "Vacant"), and that the jobs these highrises generate are virtually non-existent. Prop. M's opponents, like Mr. Haas, have no credible evidence to support their claims that "anti-growth initiatives can wreck the city."

The so-called "Downtown Plan" (which I consider a pathetic joke and a sham) was the creation of May-or Feinstein, her allies in the Planning Commission or Feinstein, her allies in the Planning Commission and the wealthy developers (ad nauseum). This "Plan" has so many loopholes for it allows any bigmoney developer to build in San Francisco. Renters/ voters of this city were not approached during the draft proceedings of this "Downtown Plan" and no public hearings were held so as to obtain community input on this issue.

It should be interesting to note that the last time Prop. M was on the ballot back in 1983, it came very close to passing (it lost by a very narrow margin of less than 1 percent of the vote). This clearly indicates how city voters have come to realize what disastrous results of overdevelopment and uncontrolled growth can do to a city as in the case of San Francisco. Voters again have the opportunity to save this city from fur-ther "Manhattanization." I will vote a resounding yes on Prop. M!

San Francisco

Don't Forget Prop. 63

★ There is an initiative on the Nov. 4 ballot with a lot in common with the LaRouche Initiative. Prop. 63, the English-Only Initiative, pretends to offer solutions but really just promotes bigotry and endangers

Prop. 63, besides making English the official language in California, would require that the role of English be "preserved and enhanced" and that no laws should "diminish or ignore" English as the non language.

English is in no danger of losing its role as the common language of California. In fact, tens of thousands of Californians are on waiting lists for English-as-a-Second-Language classes. We do need to enhance many language-related services in Cali-fornia, but this law only prevents access to vital serv-ices (medical care, voting information, education).

Prop. 63 does not specifically mention Hispanics and Asians, like Prop. 64 does not mention gay people. Both encourage and "enhance" only prejudice, doing nothing to help the groups affected or anyone else. When as gay people we are saying no to big-otry, we must remember our diversity as a community otry, we must remember our diversity as a community and say no to both 63 and 64.

Yes on '63'

Vote yes on Prop. 63 — the English only initiative for California. Multi-lingual ballots and other infor-mational services are costing taxpayers millions of wasted dollars which could be better spent on social programs for poor minorities.

When my ancestors came here (English, German & Irish), they had to learn the language and no special privileges were given to them. There are already too many illegal aliens in this state taking jobs from U.S. citizens. They are also costing us tax-payers millions in welfare costs, police enforcement costs, and they hardly pay any taxes.

So when in Rome, do what the Romans do!

No Gay Couples?

★ This letter was sent to Tony Tiano, General Manager, KQED, 500 8th St., San Francisco, CA 94103:

Dear Mr. Tiano:

Respectfully,

KQED has recently been under attack from the gay community for not representing that community in its programming. In view of that accusation, I am directing my letter to the Opera in the Park telecast of Sept. 7.

During the singing of the romantic aria, "My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice," your camera zoomed in on a number of heterosexual couples of all ages positioned in various postures of affection and love. Although there are over 100,000 homosexuals in San though there are over 100,1000 homosexuals in San Francisco, your camera failed to capture a single gay couple in that sequence — not even two gay persons sitting together. Doing so would have offered viewers a true representational sampling of the integrated San Francisco audience attending the concert.

It is just possible that your sin of omission was in-tentional. If that be the case, then you people at KQED indeed have problems of truth and integrity in telecasting — and just possibly, homophobia.

Lifestyles

This letter was sent to the San Francisco

In your opener for The Way We Are series you refer to the "homosexual lifestyle," a term that has always puzzled me. Do only gay people have a lifestyle, or is, there a "straight lifestyle, a black lifestyle?" Certainly people are different for a number of reasons and one's sexuality is but one of them

"Lifestyle," in our consumerist culture, has come to have a negative connotation, i.e. something one picks up, or buys, or takes to out of whim, something here today but maybe not tomorrow. This kind of reductionist thinking stereotypes a group of people unfairly and implies, rather condescendingly, that everyone has a life, but gays only a "lifestyle." I have yet to meet anyone with a "homosexual lifestyle!"

Censor Holly Smith

★ The following letter was sent to the SF AIDS Foundation:

I'd like to complain about the asinine statements being made to the public by your media coordinator, Ms. Holly Smith. Lately what's been coming out of her mouth has been a disservice to the gay community and to the whole AIDS problem.

The following are a few examples of what I am talking about: Last Friday when the announcement about AZT came out of Washington, D.C., Channel 4(KRONTY) interviewed Ms. Smith about this news from the National Institutes of Health. Her response from the National Institutes of Health. Her response to the message about AZT was, and I quote, "Its till doesn't change the message. We still need to prevent exposure to the AIDS virus." I don't disagree with this statement, but what the hell does it have to do with AZT and people with AIDS who already have the virus?

In a Sept. 29 Time magazine article, pg. 61, also concerning AZT and AIDS, she is quoted as saying, "For the person who does not qualify, it provides no ray of hope. In fact, it may increase levels of frustratay or no per int act, than interesser teves of instra-tion, and stress, and frustration can create negative medical effects." People with AIDS don't need her negative comments. Not all of us have relied on tradi-tional western medicine for healing. So far all they've had to offer us is AZT or a death sentence. And not getting AZT (which all AIDS patients do not neces-scrib wan) to prove the contract of the sarily want) won't make us any more frustrated than we already are.

I believe this woman should be censored and a core responsible person put in her place who bet-r represents the community and especially persons ter represen

No Respect!!

★ I'm an American opera singer, living and working for four years now in West Germany. Long-time friends of the concert and Pocket Opera scene in SF will certainly remember my name. I'm writing in response to B.A.R.'s coverage of the Theatre Rhinoc-eros flap, and especially to Matthew Inge's excellent letter in the Aug. 28 issue. Actors' Equity is an excellent union, one that looks out for its members' in-terests. If there were an opera singers' union of comparable effectiveness, perhaps I would still be liv-ing in San Francisco: working conditions for sing-ing actors in America range from pathetic to ante-deluvian, and no one dares to open his mouth to complain, because there are too many non-working singers willing to jump right in and do the job for half the money, a business full of producers who'd rather thave a cheap artist than a good one, and no union worthy of the name to protect the singers.

It is arrogant of the B.A.R. to expect gay actors to work for free ($10 a performance is very little better than working for free) when other professionals involved in the work of the AIDS crisis are compensated for their labors. No doctor or social worker is asked to work for less than his usual fee. Granted, there are volunteers (God bless them!), but few of there are volunteers (God Diess them), but tew of them are practicing the profession for which they were educated. The lawyers and accountants who are, are mostly doing it in addition to full-time employ-ment in their professions somewhere else. They are people doing something they want to do, in addition to their work. No one would dream of asking a nurse to their work. No one would dream of asking a nurse to work evenings and weekends as a waiter, wall-paperer, or moving man (jobs I know well. . .) so that he can have the privilege of pursuing his vocation with the shred of energy he has left over.

If this sounds like comparing apples to oranges to you, then that is precisely the problem: America does not take the artistic professions seriously, and the lack of respect for artistic endeavor extends well into the performing professions themselves, with the result that singers — and actors — fight for the privilege of working for a pittance. And producers, themselves often people who dreamed of careers as performers, are ever more creative in ways to wring the last drop of unpaid work from the artists. San Francisco "loves" Theatre Rhinoceros, but can never seem to get it together to support it in such a way that the participants can pursue their professions like professionals. The same could be said for just about any other SF arts organization: even the wonderful SF Opera, in a metropolitan area with a couple of Millore point in a many sold seats in any given season as the theater in my little city of 130,000.

It is a great joy for me to be here, well-paid all year round, with paid vacation, a regular contract, full medical coverage, a guaranteed retirement, and a public that loves me and takes my work seriously. Here, no one ever says to me, "Oh, you're an opera singer! How interesting! Do you also work?"

Elwood Thornton Wuerzburg, West Germany

ED. NOTE: I couldn't agree with you more that artists are routinely taken advantage of in the U.S. But you overlook one fact — B.A.R. never expected gay actors to work for free, it was their choice and that is their right.

Insurance Violations

* This letter was sent to Mr. Ken Olson, Man-* 1 Ins letter was sent to Mr. Ken Olson, Man-ager, Ordinary Actuarial Administration, Transamerica Occidental Life Insurance Company, Box 2101, Terminal Annex, Los Angeles, CA 90051; Subject: Application MPN 1, 292.

Dear Mr. Olson:

I was astonished to discover that the Transamerica Companies appear to be using the subject life in-surance application in this state because it clearly violates two California laws which have attracted considerable attention recently. Question 8.K, inquiring siderable attention recently. Question 8.K, inquiring as to "test results indicating exposure to the AIDS virus," violates California Health and Safety Code §199.21(f), which prohibits the use of such results for determining insurability in any instance. Also, the release of medical information language at the bottom of the application violates California Insurance Code $791.06, which governs the content of such Code §791.06, which governs the content of such

I could perhaps understand how an unsophisticated out-of-state insurer might use such an application in California, since individual life applications are not subject to our prior review and approval. However, your company has been an industry leader in responding to the AIDS crisis and has been outspoken on the issue of the use of HIV test results in California. Also, your company worked closely with this Department to develop acceptable model release of information language following enactment of the California Insurance Information and Privacy Pro-tection Act in 1981.

This Department hereby directs that you submit to us as soon as possible proposals for bringing all applications your companies use in California into compliance with the above-cited Code Sections. That plan should describe how you propose to reunderwrite all applications you have received with affirmative answers to questions which inquire into evalue of the control of the contro results of tests indicating exposure to the AIDS virus.
The plan should also include the form numbers and dates of introduction and withdrawal of the applications containing the offending questions.

Very truly yours,

Peter Groom Senior Counsel Dept. of Insurance State of California San Francisco

Inaccurate Reporting

This letter was sent to the San Francisco Chronicle:

We are members of Citizens for Medical Justice who were arrested in front of the Governor's Office on Wednesday, Sept. 24.

The account of this demonstration in your n paper on the following day inaccurately reported the issues we were bringing to the public attention. Assembly Bill (AB) 3407 would protect people suffering from cancer, chronic hepatitis, MS, ALS, polio and other diseases from discrimination, as v people with AIDS. Your paper reported it as an AIDS only issue

Finally, because we proved our commitment to non-violent civil disobedience, there was no need for the police to wear rubber gloves during the arrests. AIDS is not contagious, it is transmitted through the bloodstream by sharing needles and certain intimate sexual acts. The police were in no danger from us, especially since we maintained our dedication to the principles of non-violence.

Local Races Look Promising

ith the race for governor and U.S. Senator taking the limelight, one can easily overlook the fact that the Nov. 4 election gives us the opportunity to elect some good local candidates as well. One of those whom I hope is elected is attorney Paul Wotman, a gay man seeking a seat on the San Francisco Community College Board.

Wotman has been running a campaign on the issues, emphasizing the need for the college district to put more funds into the Castro/Valencia Center, located in the gay and lesbian community. While all other College Centers in the city have their own full-time facilities, the Castro/Valencia Center does not at present offer classes during the day. He has been emphasizing the importance of a Community College education in giving people the skills they need to get jobs, the skills they need to succeed in our technological society. He is committed to a College Board that provides for promotion of gay and lesbian teachers and administrators.

Wotman's campaign has been endorsed by an impressive list of leaders and groups. He has the endorsement of everyone from Board President John Molinari, to the Chinese American Demo Club, the Milk and Toklas Clubs, gay Republicans, labor unions, the majority of supervisors, three of the present College Board members, and nearly every public figure in the city.

An attorney in private practice, Paul Wotman has a record of service to the city and the lesbian and gay community that he can be proud of. No one deserves election more.

Wotman is running against three incumbents — all of whom deserve re-election except John Riordan, who has long since ceased being a useful member of that body. When the College Board hired a gay administrator from Texas, Riordan personally sent him letters and made repeated telephone calls harassing the man so much that the highly qualified gay administrator decided he didn't want the job after all.

When the AIDS Foundation used empty district space for a short period, Riordan protested and continued his protest at a number of board meetings, embarrassing his fellow board members who ended up apologizing for his actions. When the district board sent out an anonymous questionnaire seeking to determine the needs of the gay and lesbian students, Riordan again objected. When a gay man was appointed an acting dean, true to form, Riordan objected to the appointment. When fellow board member Tim Wolfred wanted to travel to Colorado to attend an education conference, Riordan, of course, objected.

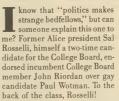

John Riordan is an embarrassment to the Community College Board, and it's time to get rid of him. Paul Wotman has long fought for gay and lesbian rights. He has worked hard, running an impressive campaign, and has an excellent chance of replacing Riordan. If he is elected, Wotman will ensure fair treatment of gay and lesbian students and teachers. This is our chance to make a badly needed change. I'm voting for Paul Wotman on the Communion of the communication of the

or BART director from the 8th District, I urge you to replace Republican Eugene Garfinkle with the highly qualified attorney Arlo Smith. An elected member of the S.F. County Democrat Central Committee since 1980, and a practicing attorney with experience in handling civil rights and labor cases, Smith is also president of San Franciscans for BART Safety, and is attuned to transit related issues.

Arlo is endorsed by the Milk and Toklas Clubs, Supervisors John Molinari and Harry Britt, Sheriff Hennessey, D.A. Arlo Smith, and a long list of gay and lesbian supporters. Smith's qualifications and his proven sensitivity to the concerns of the gay community make him a much better choice for the BART Board and the related decisions concerning its $147 million annual budget than his incumbent opponent. Vote Arlo Smith for 8th District BART Board on Nov. 4.

'(Paul) Wotman is running against three incumbents — all of whom deserve re-election except John Riordan, who has long since ceased being a successful member of that body (the San Francisco Community College Board).'

And speaking again of Mr. Riordan and his endorsements, Sheriff Mike Hennessey sent Riordan a stinging letter this week demanding that "you delete my name from your list of endorsers on all your campaign literature." Hennessey, who has endorsed Wotman in that race, added in his letter to Riordan that "one would think that you would have had the courtesy to confer with me before using my name to bolster your campaign."

Tom Bradley's gay and lesbian grassroots supporters (Milk, Toklas, Stonewall, East Bay Lesbian & Gay, and the Lesbian & Gay Caucus of Marin Dems) are holding a reception with Bradley at the Comstock Club on Sutter on Oct. 20 from 6-8:30 (donations of $30 or $50 asked; 558-8282 for info).

Plan now to attend the gala Black Tie, Naught Required 'No on 64' fundraiser at the Trocadero Transfer on Oct. 16. This is a special evening of entertainment, dancing and celebrity auction to benefit the Stop LaRouche campaign. David Kelsey, Paul Parker and others will entertain. Auction starts at 8 p.m., dancing, etc., $5 entrance (7-11 p.m., 864-4384 for info). Plan to make this one, it's the best of causes.

Eight military policewomen at West Point have been discharged from the Army during the past two months for what officials said was homosexual activity. Army officials at West Point declined to comment on reports that some of the women claimed they were intimidated during the summer investigation, that they were forced to incriminate each other, and that some denied being lesbians but were given administrative discharges anyway.

CRIR president Chris Bowman leaving Sen. Milton Marks' staff this month with Priscilla Alexander expected to take his place.

Board President John Molinari endorsed Pat Norman and Julie Tang for Supervisor this week.

Sen. Pete Wilson will make what will probably be his only Bay Area appearance this year at the Alliance breakfast, Tuesday, Oct. 21 at the Ramada Renaissance (922-0755, 543-2700 for info).

Birthday Benefit

Friends of veteran gay rights activist Cleve Jones will be celebrating Cleve's thirty-second birthday with a party at Cafe Flore on Wednesday, Oct. 15, at 8 p.m. The party, a benefit for the Friends Committee on Legislation, will include appearances by singer/songwriter Holly Near and author Armistead Maupin as well as various elected officials and candidates for public office.

A resident of San Francisco since 1973, Cleve Jones was an intern in the office of Sup. Harvey Milk and an organizer of the campaign against Prop. 6, the Briggs Initiative. Jones has serged on the Mission Mental Health Community Advisory Board, the San Francisco Delinquency Prevention Commission and the State Advisory Committee on Juvenile Justice.

In 1982, while working in the district office of Assemblymember Art Agnos, Jones joined with Dr. Marcus Conant and others to found the San Francisco AIDS Foundation. Jones was employed by the California Legislature for five years and was the principal staff person assigned to A.B. 1, the gay and lesbian employment rights bill vetoed by Gov. Deukmejian in 1984.

The Cafe Flore is located at 2298 Market Street (at Noe Street). A donation of $10, $15, or $25 will be requested at the door. All proceeds will be used to strengthen FCL's advocacy in the have some vicious friends. Lately, they've been asking me, "Mike, have you been doing something to your hair? Why is it so blond these days?" When feeling particularly coy or evasive, I respond, "Haven't you ever heard of the sun? It is summer, you know."

But more often I cut them off with the truth. "Hydrogen peroxide," I snap. "Try it sometime." Actually, I have been bleaching my hair like this for years, and people are finally noticing because this summer I got a little carried away. I have two methods, you see and one works better. you see, and one works better than the other. The first is to sprinkle a little on my hands and run them lightly through my hair. The change is gradual and

The second is to soak my head in the stuff. It's a lot quicker, but the results can be disastrous

The worst was an episode eight years ago when my then-lover decided to streak my hair with a home streaking kit. The experience was both nerve-wracking and humiliating. We fought the entire time. "You're using too much!" I screamed. "Wash it out, wash it out!"

"Trust me," he answered, and, like a fool, I did.

When at last he pulled off the shower cap with the little holes in snower cap with the little noies in it, I was a sight to behold—the laughingstock of the neighbor-hood. In desperation, I ran to the drugstore for a bottle of Roux which worked until I began to sweat. The rinse ran down my neck. Then I tried Lady Clairol. Finally, I resorted to a barber, who whacked the whole mess off.

To this day, I shudder when I remember the nightmare, although I am grateful for one thing—the experience hastened the inevitable divorce.

ost of my friends would rather die than acknowledge similar stories from their own pasts. I confess, I don't understand their reticence. Neither do I understand their smug air of disdain when I admit the truth about my own past (not to mention the present). Many of them snicker as if to say they would never stoop so low as to fuck with Mother Nature. But I feel no guilt about altering the color of my hair. Hell, I alter everything else.

I use deodorant to disguise my natural body odor. I go to the natural body odor. I go to the gym to rearrange the shape of my muscles. When the sun comes out, I roast my skin to achieve a certain patina. I have even been known to take a pair of tweezers to my eyebrows. True, I don't use hairspray or makeup (some of us leak febru without it) but if I look fabu without it), but if I wanted to, I wouldn't let false modesty or public condemnation hold me back.

Perhaps my friends snicker not because I lighten my hair but because I use peroxide to do it. "Pul-leeze," they say, "peroxide turns your hair to straw. Can't you at least see a professional colorist?"

Frankly, no. Peroxide costs less I than a dollar a bottle, and when I do it right, I can't tell the difference. Neither can they. Call me a cheap queen if you will (it's been said before). I'm simply not that vain.

Which brings us to an interest-ing point. Is it possible to carry vanity too far? Take Joan Rivers for instance (please). She makes no bones about her fondness for hair dye, plastic surgery, or anything else she can lay her hands on. The woman has no innands on. The woman has no in-tention of growing old graceful-ly. But ya gotta admit, she looks pretty good (compared to how she used to look), and if she feels betthere about herself because of her physical transformation(s), what the hell. If someone told me he had found a vacuum that would painlessly and efficiently eliminate all spare body fat for $20, I'd pay the price. I might even go as high as $100.

'When at last he pulled off the shower cap with the little holes in it, I was a sight to behold - the laughingstock of the neighborhood.'

A nyway, questions of vanity aside, I am a blond. At least, I was born one. My hair didn't turn brown until I was 11 or 12, and I have been trying to recapture that aspect of my childhood ever since.

The struggle has developed into an identity crisis of epic pro-portions. For two decades now, when asked to provide personal data for any reason (such as a driver's license or resume), the most traumatic part has been fill-ing in the blank concerning hair color. My head tells me to write
"BR" but my heart whispers
"BL." In the end, I solve the problem by merely writing "B."
(What is a male with brown hair anyway? Surely not a brunette, or anything else ending in "ette." A brownhead?)

Actually, I have nothing against people with brown hair — or people with no hair at all, for that matter. I even sleep with them occasionally. It's just that I have a certain image of myself with hair like Alexander's Hephaestion, an image which I am determined to create (if I cannot preserve it). Like Frank Sinatra (or is is Sammy Davis Jr.?), I gotta be me — even if that me is an illusion.

So I persevere. I shrug when I walk into a room and friends burst into spontaneous choruses of "Bleach Baby, Bleach Baby."

I smile when they ask, "Is it true? Do blonds have more fun? mean, if Troy Donahue could get away with it, so can I. Besides, somebody's got to keep the per oxide companies in business.

S.F.S.U. Course On AIDS Science

'The need to provide accuare, up-to-date information on AIDS is growing as rapidly as the epidemic itself," says Robert M. Schmidt, M.D., who will be teaching a course on the disease on Saturday, Oct. 11, 8:30 a.m. to 12 noon, at San Francisco State University, Science Building, Room 101.

The course covers the epidemiology, etiology, immunology, clinical, treatment, prevention, and education aspects of the disease. Participants will view the Tom Brokaw AIDS special plus film on the politics of AIDS, heterosexual AIDS, and AIDS in women. In addition to learning the signifi-cance of diagnostic tests, participants can expect to increase their overall understanding of the relationship between health and disease, with emphasis on AIDS and ARC, immune susceptibility to ny disease, and prospects for the future.

Prof. Schmidt is a physician/ scientist with extensive experience in medical research, teach ing and clinical practice. He is professor of hematology at San Francisco State University, director of the Center for Preventive Medicine and Health Research at Pacific Presbyterian Medical

'Hardwick' Hearing Denied By The Supreme Court

WASHINGTON—It is now official. Bowers v. Hardwick is a legal case of the past. The Supreme Court of the United States said so when it denied a petition for a rehearing of the case which said Georgia's aging, creaking sodomy law was okay.

The Court didn't even bother to offer an explanation for rejecting a rehearing of the arguments. Attorneys representing Michael Hardwick, the man who filed suit against the State of Georgia, said there were other constitutional issues to be resolved. But apparently their pleas went unnoticed by the outgoing Burger Court. In the Hardwick ruling, the Supreme Court held that homosexual activity even in the privacy of the home and between consenting adults—is not protected by the Constitution.

Leonard Graff, legal director of the National Gay Rights Advocates in San Francisco, said at least two other cases challenging sodomy laws are pending in the Supreme Court in the near

Conservatives Block $3K Grant For Pro-Gay Agency

FT. LAUDERDALE—Conservative members of a Southern Florida Episcopal diocese blocked a $3,420 grant earmarked for a Fort Lauderdale agency. Center One had been all set to receive the grant until allegations were raised that the Center's director, Msgr. Fred Tondalo, and many of its volunteers advocated the "gay lifestyle."

Rev. Clifford Horvath, rector of the Church of the Resurrection, said he changed his mind about backing a grant for Center One once he found out that Tondalo was gay. "If it's true, then I wan no part of it. My vestry feels pretty strong about it."

Horvath wasn't the only clergyman up in arms over Tondalo's sexual orientation. Rev. Bryan Hobbes, a known conservative in Hollywood, FL, also objected to funds for Center One. This was after he had visited Tondalo at the center and offered financial help.

"When the subject of homosexuality came up and he found out I was gay, his opinion started changing," said Tondalo. Hobbes told the Miami Herald that he would prefer to see money go to Worthy Creations, a Broward group of "reformed" gays who seek to convert gays while ministering to people with AIDS.

Sabotage Alleged At The CDC

ATLANTA—The Miami Herald has alleged that there have been numerous incidents of sabotage of viral experiments at the federal Centers for Disease Control (CDC) in Atlanta. Both external and internal agents at the CDC have indicated that secret CDC memos which claim that research has been destroyed by an unknown person or persons over the past several months.

The Herald reported that Dr. James Curran, head of the CDC AIDS Program, is "at the center of the controversy." Sources said that several scientists were forced to leave the CDC because of the managerial role played by

A memo was distributed by Neile McGrath, a CDC biologist who alleged that cultures were destroyed by the manipulation of the amount of carbon dioxide regulated in the incubation compartments. In at least one instance, the author of the memo refers to "LAV virus," the French name for HIV. Another memo alleges five incidents of "suspected intentional tampering with laboratory equipment have occurred in the Viral Exanthems and Herpesvirus Branch (VEHB)" of the CDC in the past several months.

How Does AZT Work?

by Pat Christen San Francisco AIDS Foundation

he alphabet soup of AIDS he alphabet soup of AIDS drugs seems endless:
AZT, CS-85, ST, HPA-23.
Whether AZT, or any other treatment, will ever be effective against AIDS remains to be seen.
Should you take AZT? Should you try CS-85? Understanding how each of these drugs attempts to disrupt the AIDS virus can help you in your decision.
The only way to understand.

The only way to understand any AIDS drug, whether it be AZT or vitamin C, is to understand the operations of the AIDS virus. AZT, for example, is often referred to as a "reverse transcriptase inhibitor." What does that mean? What are the implications of a drug that acts against reverse transcriptase? For that matter, what is reverse transcrip-tase? While the words sound technical and complicated, un-derstanding them is not.

To evaluate AZT or CS-85 or the other proposed AIDS drugs, you must have some knowledge of "reverse transcriptase," "binding sites," and other mysterious phrases. And for that, you need to know a little about vi-

Put a marble in the palm of our hand, Make a fist around it. Then, cover your fist with a paper bag. You have just created a fair imitation of a virus.

Viruses have three main parts: an inner core of genetic material, either RNA or DNA (the marble); a middle layer of protein (your fist) designed to shelter the RNA/DNA marble; and an outer shell (the paper bag) made of pro-teins and fats which further pro-tects the middle layer and inner core of the virus.

Viruses can only reproduce by invading other cells. In fact, they invading other cells. In fact, they are incapable of reproducing outside of cells. The cell which harbors a virus is called a "host." In the case of the AIDS virus, the host cell is usually a helper Teelly. Teells are specialized disease fighting cells in the body.

Although the AIDS virus shares these common traits with other viruses, it is actually distinct from most of the viruses seen in humans. Following the route of the AIDS virus from infecting a human to reproducing in a T-cell illustrates many of the AIDS virus's distinct qualities.

When it first enters the blood-stream, the AIDS virus seems harmless enough. It gets bumped along with everything else float-ing around in the blood. The virus is like a branch floating down a river. If it bumps into the right object, purely by chance, it can lodge in place, otherwise it continues to float along.

hen the AIDS virus bumps into a helper T-cell, special structures protruding from the viral surface will stick to the Tcell. These structures are called antigens. Antigens are very fussy about where they will and will not stick, however. It is as though the virus has a unique key—the antigen has a unique key — the antigen — that fits only one lock. This lock is called the receptor site.

Once locked in place on the Tcell, the virus injects its genetic material inside. The AIDS virus happens to be single-stranded RNA. Think of RNA as a set of guidelines which the virus must follow in order to function. Everything the virus does is the result of its RNA rules. When the viral RNA enters the T-cell, complications arise. Being a newcomer to a foreign land, the virus soon discovers that its set of rules, the RNA, is written in a rules, the RNA, is written in a language incomprehensible to the Tcell. In this case, the rules of the host Tcell are written in double-stranded language (DNA), while the viral rules are written in single-stranded language (RNA).

Yet the virus must communi-Yet the virus must communi-cate with the T-cell, for its ability to reproduce depends entirely upon the host T-cell. The virus overcomes this barrier by using an "interpretor" to translate its single-stranded language into double-stranded language the T-cell will understand cell will understand.

In the AIDS virus, the interpretor is called "reverse transcriptase" Reverse transcriptase is a special agent which takes virus RNA and turns it into DNA so the Teell can understand it. Reverse transcriptase translates languages at a genetic level. It turns the single-stranded rules (RNA) into double-stranded rules (DNA). (This is the reverse process of what occurs in most cells. Normally, DNA is translated into RNA. But the AIDS virus does this translation backwards, from RNA to DNA, thus it is labeled a "retrovirus.") ow that it's in the appropriate language, the viral DNA can work in the T-cell. There it lodges itself, in effect adding new rules to the T-cell. Following the virus DNA directions, the T-cell begins to directions, the Feeli begins to manufacture new viruses. Unfor-tunately, the new rules also dic-tate that virus reproduction will take place at very high speed; the Teell follows the instructions and produces viruses a thousand times faster than the normal rate.

'Viruses can only reproduce by invading other cells. In fact, they are incapable of reproducing outside of cells.

When infected with the AIDS When infected with the AIDS virus, the T-cell, a crucial disease fighting cell in the body's immune system, becomes its own worst enemy. By following the virus DNA rules, the T-cells have become a virus factory. Hundreds of viruses will be created which will reaches and great will be come and controlled. will weaken and eventually de-stroy more T-cells as they are released into the bloodstream.

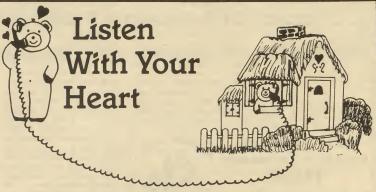

Why is all of this so important?
Because the process involved from injection of viral RNA into the cell, to the release of new viruses into the blood, are the same process which AIDS anti-viral treatments attempt to interviral treatments attempt to inter-rupt. AZT, for example, is a drug which disrupts the activity of re-verse transcriptase, the viral "in-terpretor." AZT keeps the virus RNA from being translated into Tcell rules (DNA) so the virus is unable to gain control of Tcell operations

Remember, whether AZT, or any other treatment, will ever be effective against AIDS remains to be seen. One fact remains certain, however. Understanding how the AIDS virus works will help each of us decipher the potential will be of precible treat. tential value of possible treat-

AIDS cases and maps showing areas of the nation and world areas of the nation and world where the largest number of cases have been found. Some sections read like amateur medical reports, signed by LaRouche's "Biological Holocaust Task Force." There are references to mothers passing AIDS to their children and "environmental" conditions which cause AIDS—as inadequate housing, poor sanimadequate as inadequate housing, poor sani-tation, and the lack of control of rat and insect populations.

Knowing that the California Medical Association and almost every local public health official opposes Prop. 64, the text turns to the conspiracy theory—for some unstated reason. The claim some unstated reason. The claim is made that LaRouche's logic will be "ignored, or suppressed, and those who provide such evi-dence will be harassed or de-famed."

The authors attack Dr. Mervyn Silverman who has been vocal in his attack on the measure. They claim "his refusal to apply elementary public health measures (and not the large gay population) made San Francisco population) made 3an Flancisco a national center for AIDS." They called his claim that insects do not spread AIDS as "prepos-terous." LaRouche's National Demo-cratic Policy Committee, a name created to confuse the public, published the literature. In its conclusion it asks readers to sub-mit $45 for the committee's magazine and a membership. Those joining the committee, it states, will be supporting its goals—the war against drugs and terrorism, halting the spread of AIDS, a new international monetary system, defense against nuclear missile attack, aid to selected foreign countries—and a national commitment to colonize the moon and Mars.

Reading the brochure does not help the reader to understand what Prop. 64 is about. The ballot what Prop. 64 is about. In e ballot proposition would require the reporting of names of those with AIDS or "suspected." It would probably bar food handlers and school employees and students who have AIDS or who test positive on the HIV antibody test. It would excurse the quaranting would encourage the quarantining of those with AIDS. The measure is so ambiguous courts would have to determine what its wording means

The large YES brochure has been a surprise to traditional campaign operatives. Ordinarily, small two or three-page handouts that can be quickly read are published in campaigns. The in-formation in most campaign bro-chures are briefly highlighted rather than extensively explained. The smaller brochures are also cheaper to reproduce in large quantities. By contrast, the magazine-like LaRouche brochure is bulky and requires considerable reading time.

Red Cross Denies Report on AIDS Guide

by George Mendenhall

A national Red Cross official claims that a UPI wire service story about the American Red Cross endorsing the use of surgical gloves and masks when dealing with people "suspected" of having AIDS is erroneous. In the story by Nicki Cervantes, the agency's Los Angeles public relations director, Ralph Wright, is quoted as saying, "The public should take the same precautions we recommend emergency workers take."

The UPI story said that the Red Cross recommended the use of surgical gloves and masks "when dealing with suspected AIDS victims." These appeared to be inconsistent with the agency's recent strong opposition against Prop. 64 which contends that AIDS cannot be casually transmitted. There is no medical evidence that a single health-worker has contracted AIDS or that AIDS can be transmitted by Brian Buberry, a Washington, D.C., Red Cross official, told Bay Area Reporter, "The UPI story was inaccurate. The only time we recommend gloves is when emer recommend gloves is when emer-gency workers are dealing with open, bleeding wounds." He said that the agency's guidelines recommend that such workers should carry a mouthpiece for mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

"We follow the Centers for Disease Control guidelines and we do not believe that AIDS is transmitted by saliva," he said.

Wright aligned himself with paramedics and two state associ-ations, the Federated Firefighters ations, the Federated Firefighters and the Peace Officers Association, at a Sept. 24 press conference. The police group is attempting to get the state to purchase masks and gloves for its 30,000 members. Firefighters' representative Michael Hennessey told the media, "There is a need to take precautions against need to take precautions against the unknowns associated with AIDS," a theme used by extremist Lyndon LaRouche.

Terry Gautier, Red Cross national media coordinator, said she did not understand why Wright was involving himself in the Sept. 24 media event. She called it "grandstanding."

Whether or not the Northern California Red Cross officials were espousing any policy remains unknown since director Carol Bosturm and health director tor Margo Malarkey said they could not comment. In Los An-geles, Wright is on vacation and no one in his office would comment.

Ken McPherson, co-chair of Mobilization Against AIDS, has been working to clarify the confusion over the report. He said one of the reasons there is confusion is that local Red Cross chapters are unclear on their positions, even with national guidance. He said the language used by the Red Cross "was imprecise and showed a lack of experience in dealing with AIDS, including terminology that causes hysteria. Ken McPherson, co-chair of terminology that causes hysteria. For example, the 'masks' being referred to should be called what reterred to should be called what they are — plastic, portable mouth pieces. The Red Cross should make its position clear, nationally and locally."

The same day as the controver-The same day as the controver-sial press reports, state police of-ficers wore surgical gloves when they confronted eight Bay Area activists during a sit-in in the governor's Sacramento office. State Police Commander Robert Cardwell said his men requested the gear because some of those protesting the veto of AIDS legislation by the governor might have AIDS.

22-On-The-Red Goes to Rio

One of the city's most successful fundraisers, 22-OnThe-Red casino night, enters its seventh year Oct. 11 with the presentation of awards to distinguished recipients for their work and commitment in solving the AIDS crisis.

ment in solving the AIDS crisis.

Hosted by the Golden Gate
Business Association (GGBA), this year's gambling and entertainment extravaganza at the Gifteenter is projected to raise $100,000. Net proceeds benefit the GGBA Foundation, San Francisco AIDS Fund and AIDS research and treatment.

Mayor Dianne Feinstein will be pesented with one of the first GGBA Foundation awards, recognizing the work she's done locally with AIDS concerns. The University of California at San Francisco will also receive honors for its work on AIDS research.

While promoting an important mission to solve the AIDS crisis, GGBA representatives promise that this year's 22-0nThe-Red will carry on the tradition of fantasy and fun. The 1986 theme, "Cruising Down to Rio," incorporates Brazilian music, along with guests clad in South American Carnaval or black tie attire. For the first time, 22-0nThe-Red will begin with a gourmet gala dinner, followed by a $2 million fur fashion show sponsored by Neiman-Marcus before the gambling games begin.

Several dozen prominent city officials and Bay Area celebrities are serving as honorary chairpeople. According to GGBA Foundation president Tom Fleming, Jr., ''We've received tremendous support form so many — we couldn't be more thrilled. Individuals, small businesses and national corporations are working together to volunteer time and money. Members of GGBA and Bay Area Career Women in particular are to be commended for their tireless work and support."

One of the largest and most popular fundraising events hosted by the lesbian/gay community, 22-OnThe-Red this year expects to attract 1500 guests.

Tickets for dinner and gambling are $150 per person, tax deductible, and tickets for gambling only are $40 advance or $50 at the door. Ticket prices include admission, hors d'oeuvres and gaming chips. For tickets and information, call 956-8677.

Norman

For the 1986 campaign Norman has raised $60-70,000 so far. The money is being spent on billboards, radio ads, and bus signs. But on Oct. 5 the billboards were yet to be seen, while those for her rivals were blossoming around the city. Said the candidate, "Ours will be up this week."

On the current issue of drugs, Norman spoke of her concerns. "There are a lot of problems in funding for all the drug service agencies in the city but particularly for the drug agencies that serve our community—the Iris Project, Operation Concern and 18th Street Services. All these gay and lesbian agencies need more funding because they are all operating on a shoestring. And we have an alcoholism rate of 33 percent in the lesbian and gay community in the Bay Area."

Norman is a long time activist on school issues. She explained that the school district is readily accepting of resolutions emanating from the gay community but much less willing to see them implemented. Said Norman, "They (the school board) have not taken responsibility for the role education plays in ending violence against us."

On AIDS funding Norman said she felt the city was doing a good job of funding AIDS services and she added that the federal government would be funciling over $300 million into local government around the country this year to fight the epidemic. But she said that services for people who have ARC and for homeless people with AIDS need to be upgraded. "These people shouldn't have to worry about housing or treatment services," said Norman.

Norman's campaign has been endorsed by a wide variety of groups, including union locals, environmental groups and feminist organizations. Even the District 8 Democratic Club, in Dan White's former stomping grounds, has given the lesbian candidate its endorsement.

On Sup. Harry Britt's endorsement, Norman said, "I see us as being able to cooperate around all the issues of concern to our community."

Norman is a longtime supporter of the boycott against KQED and was one of those on the picket line last March outside the station's studios when the Fabian Bridge's program was aired.
"'These people are not taking us very seriously. When we talk to them they say they don't understand what the problem is with discriminatory programming.
Until they make changes we should not support them."

On Prop. 64, the LaRouche Initiative, Norman talked about what her actions would be if the proposition were to pass in November and she found herself on the Board of Supervisors. "All I can think of is war. Obviously this law is unconstitutional. We will go to the courts and fight it. But we will also have to deal with the fallout should it pass. I would be very concerned about anybody who has the virus. We would have to find some way to protect them."

Pat Norman is fighting an uphill fight and she has already proven herself a popular vote-getter in her previous try for the Board of Supervisors. If she gets the additional 25,000 votes she feels will be necessary to win this time, it may surprise many in the political world but not Pat Norman.

Molinari Endorses Pat Norman

President of the San Francisco Board of Supervisors, John L. Molinari has endorsed progressive candidate Pat Norman for supervisor. Molinari, who has broad-based support throughout the city and who is the senior member on the Board of Supervisors, praised Norman's candidacy.

"Pat Norman's more than 15 years of public service has resulted in the increased effectiveness of every organization with which she has worked," he said. "I support Pat because I am certain a better board and a better San Francisco can be the only result."

Heat Wave Hits Castro Street

by Allen White

Over 50,000 people gathered as they have since 1974 on Castro Street for the annual Castro Street Fair. With sun raising the temperature to the 80 de-gree mark, the crowd was relaxed and mellow.

The street closed early Sunday morning as the trucks the street closed early saintay monthing as the trucks started to unload their wares. For several days the display space had been sold out. What began as a small one block fair has mushroomed in size over the years. The fair now covers two full blocks on Castro, another two blocks on 18th Street and stretches down a long block on Market Street.

It is on Market Street that the huge stage is placed. Throughout the afternoon, people danced in the street to the music of groups such as Glorious Din and the Blazing Redheads

Castro Street Fair regulars Tom Ammiano and Suzy Berger were effective with their sharp tongued wit. Ammiano was particularly successful with his social comments about the Pope being offended by Reagan's remarks that San Francisco is a city that colorful dressers should visit. Ammiano described California Gov. George "Duke Macho" as "having all the warmth of a Versateller."

The Castro Street Fair was begun, in part, as a political vehicle for Harvey Milk. That political presence has always been visible. Last Sunday the heavy political concern surrounded Prop. 64. People registering voters were scattered throughout the fair.

Supervisorial candidate Pat Norman had a booth and Supervisoriat candidate Pat Norman had a booth and distributed thousands of pieces of literature. She also spoke to the crowd as did College Board candidate Paul Wotman. All the gay political clubs were in evidence with booths for voter registration and the distribution of candidates

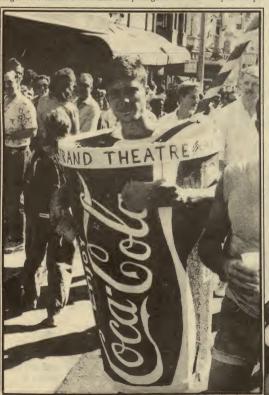

One of the most popular booths of the day was operated by the People with AIDS Alliance. For one dollar, a person with AIDS offered a hug and a teddy bear pin. During the course of the day they raised over $600.

The Golden Gate Business Association had an area for The Golden Gate Business Association had an area for people to "wash a hunk" as a benefit for the Shanti Project. The Castro Lions Club had a successful afternoon selling the opportunity to "dunk a hunk." Several of the bars were jammed to capacity where the cheers and screams were directed not at the fair but at the 49ers football game.

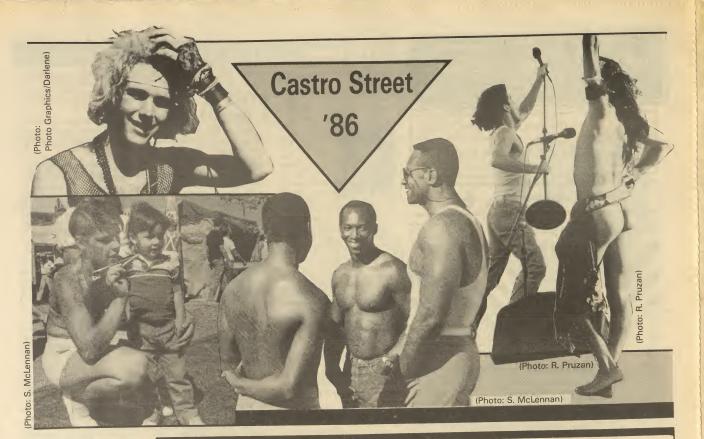

The most spirited activity of the afternoon came from the many photographers. Home video cameras were in evidence throughout the fair as camera buffs captured the unique images of San Francisco's drag queens and muscle men who casually stood in the afternoon sun.

CRIR Snubs Duke

Concerned Republicans for Individual Rights withheld its endorsement from Republican Gov. George Deukmejian and candidate for lieutenant governor, Mike Curb, Monday, Oct. 6.

At its September meeting, CRIR unanimously endorsed Congressman Ed Zschau for United States Senate. In October, CRIR endorsed only one additional Republican candidate for statewide office, Senator Bill Campbell, running for state controller.

CRIR's board recommended to the membership that it not endorse Deukmejian unless four conditions were met: that the governor actively campaign against Prop. 64, that he sign an executive order making AIDS discrimination against state policy, that he negotiate with the Legislature to restore AIDS funding cuts, and that he meet with his AIDS advisors and the leadership of the gay Republican organizations in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Orange County, and San Diego.

On the Supreme Court justices race, the club went on record opposing the confirmation of Chief Justice Rose Bird, and made no recommendation on the confirmation of Justices Cruz Reynoso and Joseph Grodin. It favored reclection for Justices Stanley Mosk, Malcolm Lucas, and Joseph Panelli. Mosk was endorsed on the first ballot.

On legislative races, the club overwhelmingly endorsed Assemblyman Bill Filante (Marin/Sonoma) for reelection because of his support for AB-1, AB-3667 (AIDS discrimination ban), and his authorship of the AIDS vaccine bill, AB-2404. The club also endorsed Mike Garza for the 5th Congressional seat and Jeff Corino (who is running against Willie Brown) in the 17th Assembly.

AIDS ANTIBODY TESTING

Free, Anonymous Test Program Continues in San Francisco

New funding will extend the anonymous AIDS antibody testing program offered by the San Francisco Department of Public Health.

Without revealing your name or identity, you can make an appointment to learn more about the test by telephoning 621-4858. T-Th. 3-9 p.m.; F. 12-5 p.m.; Sat 8 a.m.-5 p.m. MAKING AN APPOINTMENT DOES NOT COMMIT YOU TO TAKING THE TEST. The AIDS antibody test detects the presence of antibodies to the AIDS virus by using a simple blood test. This is not a test for AIDS. The test does NOT show if you have AIDS or an AIDS Related Condition (ARC), nor can it tell if you will develop AIDS or ARC in the future. THE TEST DOES SHOW IF YOU HAVE BEEN INFECTED WITH THE VIRUS WHICH CAN CAUSE AIDS.

Although the test is available at other locations. your anonymity is guaranteed if you take the test at an Alternative Test Site. You will receive your test results at the San Francisco Alternative Test Sites without revealing your identity or losing your privacy. Post-test consulting and referrals are available.

Your decision whether or not to take the test is a difficult one. The San Francisco AIDS Foundation is not recommending that you either take or not take the test. YOU MUST DECIDE FOR YOURSELF. We want to provide you with information that will help you make the decision that is right for you.

'No on 64' Auction Set For Palo Alto

by Gerard Koskovich

The Peninsula No On 64 Committee has set a dance and auction for Oct. 14 at the Vortex in Palo Alto. Organizers say they have planned the event to widen their outreach to local voters and to raise funds for the statewide campaign against the AIDS quarantine initiative that will appear on the November Ballot.

"We wanted to have an event where people could have fun and help defeat Prop. 64 at the same time," said Mountain View resident Will Doherty of the Peninsula No On 64 Committee. "We also wanted a fundraiser that young people and others on limited incomes could afford."

The dance will feature a variety of progressive music and a nohost bar. During the party, an auction will offer goods and services donated by local merchants, including a hot tub visit at Watercourse Way in Palo Alto, movie passes from the New Varsity Theater, and brunch at Late For the Train in Menlo Park.

Other items on the block are a queen size waterbed from Marugg Designs, a dinner at the Cruiser Restaurant in Redwood City, limousine service from Sunrise Limo, a styling session at Tony Lucco's Hair, Inc., and historic posters from the Stanford Lesbian and Gay Archives Project.

Peninsula No On 64 members said that the campaign has been progressing well in the Palo Alto area. For this reason, they have earmarked funds from the dance and auction for the statewide anti-64 media campaign.

"I've been surprised by the support for our efforts on the Mid-Peninsula. We've encountered a largely positive response," Doherty said.

The Peninsula committee is currently finalizing plans for intensive canvassing and get-out-the-vote activities; both will require additional volunteers from the local community, Arnold said.

For information on the Peninsula No on 64 Committee, call (415) 961-1013, or write P.,O. Box 9458, Stanford, CA 94305. The group meets weekly on Thursday evenings at 8 p.m. in the Stanford Gay and Lesbian Community Center at the Old Firehouse (Santa Teresa St. between Lomita and Duena Sts. on the Stanford campus).

The Stop LaRouche Dance Party and Auction will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 14, 9 p.m. to 1 a.m., at the Vortex, 260 California Ave., off El Camino Real in Palo Alto. Tickets are $8 in advance, $10 at the door; available by mail from Peninsula No On 64 and at the Vortex box office.

Nobel Winner Says Prop. 64 Based on 'False Science'

Peninsula Scientists Denounce LaRouche Initiative: 'Would Only Make Matters Worse'

by Gerard Koskovich

Twelve Peninsula leaders in science, education, industry, and politics have joined in a strongly-worded statement of opposition to Prop. 64, the LaRouche AIDS quarantine initiative. The group includes a Nobel prize-winning biochemist, the president of Stanford University, and the dean of the Stanford Medical School.

The statement, which appeared in a half-page advertisement in the Sept. 24 issue of the Palo Alto Weekly, labeled the arguments of pro-64 forces "false science" and "misleading propaganda" and denounced the efforts of a "small political group to dictate the public health policy of California.

E. Bay AIDS Project Gets New Name

The Pacific Center AIDS Project has changed its name to the AIDS Project of the East Bay. Although the name has changed, the organization remains a project of the Pacific Center for Human Growth.

"Our new name will give us greater visibility to the diverse community we serve," says Noreen McKeon, newly named as project director.

Through professional staff and trained volunteers, the AIDS Project of the East Bay provides educational services through outreach to health care workers and the community at large to sensitize institutions and educate the public about AIDS. The Project also provides free counseling and support for people with AIDS/ARC, their lovers, families, and friends.

Originally from New York, McKeon has been with the Pacific Center for Human Growth for over five years and has extensive experience with the AIDS Project. She brings to her new position both AIDS and management expertise, as well as sensitivity to the many and diverse populations served by the AIDS Project.

The AIDS Project of the East Bay also welcomed Ernest Andrews to the position of clinical coordinator. Andrews is responsible for the overall supervision of direct services to AIDS Project clients and for training volunteer counselors, who serve those clients.

Andrews brings a wealth of experience to his position as clinical coordinator. Born and raised in Brooklyn, Andrews worked for ten years in the theater, before earning his B.A. in education from Bishop College in Dallas, and a masters in counseling from Prairie View, Texas in 1981.

"The public is legitimately frightened of AIDS," the statement continued. "It could be easily misled, by a desire to 'do something,' into doing something that would only make matters worse."

The statement closed with a call for opposition to the initiative and for donations to Scientists and Citizens Against Prop. 64, the Palo Alto-based group that sponsored the Weekly advertisement.

Among those signing the anti-64 statement were Stanford biochemistry professor Paul Berg, winner of the 1980 Nobel Prize in chemistry, Stanford University President Donald Kennedy, a biologist and former commissioner of the federal Food and Drug Administration, and Stanford medical School Dean David Korn.

Berg is believed to be the first Nobel laureate to announce his opposition to Prop. 64. Kennedy has been an active supporter of AIDS organizing at Stanford; he hosted a benefit at his campus home last May that raised over $30,000 for Bay Area AIDS charities.

Signatories also included Stanford chemistry professor Carl Djerassi, inventor of the birth control pill, State Assembly member Byron Sher (D-Mountain View), Lane Publishing Company chairman Melvin Lane, Ryland Kelley, partner in the Silicon Valley real estate firm of Hare, Brewer, and Kelley, and Edward L. Ginzton, founder of Varian Associates.

According to Felix Smith, chair of Scientists and Citizens Against Prop. 64, his group also wrote to request an endorsement from W. Glenn Campbell, director of the conservative Hoover Institution at Stanford, but received no reply. Campbell was not available for comment.

The Hoover Institution was among the research centers allegedly slated for involvement in a controversial AIDS study proposed last February by a San Francisco group that called for marking AIDS patients with a "Star of David" symbol. Campbell denied at the time that Hoover was involved.

Smith said that the response to the Scientists and Citizens appeal for support was generally positive. "We knew that Don Kennedy and lots of other people would be supportive if we approached them with something firm and moderate," he said.

"We have an awful lot of people on the Peninsula on our side," Smith added. "My concern is with the statewide campaign. Even with all the people coming out opposed to Prop. 64, the general public has its own way of thinking."

According to Smith, Scientists and Citizens has been particularly interested in outreach to nongay people. This tactic is intended to complement the work of the Stanford-based Peninsula No On 64 Committee, which has primarily directed its efforts at the local gay and lesbian community, he said.

"I had a lot of contacts in Palo Alto that weren't part of the networks that were forming," Smith explained. "I realized that those connections into the middle-of-the-road straight community — Stanford professors, people at SRI International, where I used to work — would be valuable to the campaign."

I wouldn't Touch It With an Eleven-Foot Pole

DENIZEN, YES; HEGEMONY, NO!

Hooboy! Respite's requisites and reticule's revenue notwith-standing, it's still somewhat of a mystery to me why many consider yours truly to be omnipotent and omnipresent in the East Bay. Members of the Fourth Estate, no matter what position held, seem to fall into the "omnip' category just by the very nature of the beast of journalism.

Cases in point from the mail bag, (1) "Greetings from one of Oakland's lost children having left the shallow attitude of Oakland for the overwhelming attitudes of San Francisco. I still seem to draw dirt in Oakland. Yes, I am undergoing a severe series of tests. No, I do not have AIDS as the rumor mill has it.

"Yes, I do have a new love interest (as of 8/6/86) and he is over the legal age of consent—not 16 like the stories have said. I do miss some people and places in the East Bay: The T&C, the Revol, Sam & Marr, you and your spouse, Emp. V Don, John Walters, Ric O., Little Mother, and Eddie P.

"What I don't miss is much too long to list. I was still very proud of Oakland's involvement with the Parade on 29 June. I still got that lump in my throat when Oakland came down the street. Peter, please continue to give 'em hell in the B.A.R. If certain people and groups (ACIE) can't take the pressure then perhaps they will change their attitudes before all is too late." No return address

I guess my supposed "omnip" was out to lunch. I have heard no such rumors. I appreciate the communication but was somewhat confused as to the reasons for the writing. "Give 'em hell"? Who? Me?

(2) "Mr. Nes Par [sic]—I am very good friends of the (title and title holder's name) and his secret lover (name). Give you a base line (names) have been seeing each other since (date). (Name) was 17 years old. Now he's 21. Anyway there was a big fight between them on (date) at 2:15 a.m. in front of (bar's name). I heard (title) was two hours late to have his secret renvoudous [sic] with (name). Anyway (name) was outside and they started to argue with one another. Then (title) started to kick the shit out of (name).

"Several persons saw this so we decided it was time for the whole affair to be exposed. We feel sorry for (name) cuz he is (height, weight, hair color, and looks), he doesn't deserve getting the shit beat out of him. Everyone thinks that (title) is a saint. Also, when (title) was seeing (another name) from (business name). He was still continuing to meet secretly with (name). Big story here. Anyway here's some phone numbers of people who know of all the dirt about (title) and (name) deserves a little help from us cuz he's a foolish young kid in love who doesn't know better. Maybe if you contact them you can have a great story.

"P.S. I am sure (name) is ready to come out and expose (title)!" No name or address given.

Would a "very good friend" really write such a letter? Yours truly doesn't think that the B.A.R. has any intention of intruding on the journalistic territory of the National World Globe Star Enquirer. I don't mean any belittlement or lack of compassion, but it does strike me as a plot from Dynasty, and I've never seen the program!

Cases in point from the mouth to ear: (1) "Have you heard the latest about two of Oakland's (attire and racial descriptions?) who are under surveillance for being involved with drugs? People are afraid to be seen with them for fear of being implicated by association.

No, I hadn't heard. But then, we don't run in the same circles, and my "omnip" wasn't tuned in.

(2) "Do you have a current address for (name)? He moved out without paying back rent, and he ripped off two other apartments and we're looking for him!"

and we're looking for him!"

Mercy! A "press cap" in no way resembles a detective's badge. Again, the "omnip" syndrome isn't. I am befuddled by the "power" that people associate with a byline. It is a tad flattering, but these four kinds of "expos &s" certainly aren't in my league. Steve Wilson of The Big Story, I'm not! (If you remember early radio, you'll know what I mean.)

ABAFT TO ENTELECHY (An Unembellished Nose?)

The Galaxy of Stars Court (the eighth reign of ACIE) will have its Investiture for Emperor VIII David and Empress VIII Mama Chuckles on Saturday, Nov. 8, at Guild Hall (the same hall that was used for Bitches in Black).

Mama Chuckles' Stuffed Animal Raffles have expanded from the boundaries of the Paradise. These weekly Sunday fundraisers for Adopt-A-House not only can be found at the Paradise, but also at the Lake Lounge, Town & Country, Revol, Turf Club, and ... (Mama Chuckles is still working on more!)

The Paradise's first effort for raising funds for CALM (a car wash) raised a total of $286. Tsk tsk to Sam, Marv, Ralph, and Pete for not taking their cars down so Billy and Eddy could "bust the suds" on 'em. The Paradise's second effort, scheduled for Sunday, Nov. 2, was to have been a Grand March from Oakland to Hayward. The logistics were impossible, so an alternate activity will be substituted.

Next week's CALM fund-

Next week's CALM fundraisers include the T&C Dollies On the Road at participating bars, Saturday, Oct. 11; and donations solicited at Bench & Bar's Variety Show on Sunday, Oct. 12.

Don't forget misses Rose and Caron in Concert at the Paradise, this Satuday, Showtime is 10 p.m. The $8 cover includes a midnight buffet dinner—if you still have an appetite after watching "Just two dudes who dare to be different"! (Only kidding, Tommi and Joanna)

FORTIFYING PHENOMENON! (An Awed Nose!)

The current Movies/Newsletter/Schedule of Events from the Galleon Bar and Restaurant in San Francisco list for Monday Oct. 20: Bridging The Gap San Francisco opens its arms to our friend (I do hope that was a typo and should have been friends) in the East Bay. Cocktail at 7:30 p.m. and dinner served at 8 p.m.

(Honey, people from the East Bay can down more than one cocktail each in 30 minutes!) Special Take Me Along rates apply.

Further into the publication is: Recommendations—The Galleon Bar and Restaurant recommends that while in the city of Oakland, stop by and visit our friends Sam & Marv at Town & Country, Peter at Revol (What happened to Ralph?), and Fred and Chuck at The Paradise.

According to the rumor mill, close to 50 from Oakland will be calling in reservations! Let's just hope that the scheduled movie on that date isn't indicative. The movie that day is The Omen!

No matter what goes wrong, there is always somebody who knew it would! It's worth a smile. Love, Nez

Albert Ellis To Lead San Jose Seminar

Dr. Albert Ellis, one of the world's foremost authorities on human sexuality and marriage and family therapist for over forty years, will appear in San Jose on Sunday, Oct. 12, at a Workshop in Rational-Emotive Therapy. Rational-emotive therapy was developed by Ellis and is an action-oriented therapy program which uses scientifically based methods to promote philosophic, emotional and behavioral changes.

The one-day workshop will outline the basic concepts of rational-emotive therapy (RET). RET holds that people are not so much conditioned by others, but instead tend to agree with others and tend to condition themselves to act in perfectionist, demanding ways. RET actively and scientifically teaches them to dispute and uproot their own dysfunctional beliefs and to take charge of their own lives.

For more information on this seminar with Dr. Ellis, call Bob Scowcroft, University Extension, at (408) 429-2761.

Outsiders in Paradise

Christopher Beck & Co. Dance Theater Speaks to a Gay Sensibility

by Mark I. Chester

s artists, choreographer Christopher Beck and composer Peter Hartman are used to asking difficult questions. But it is truly synchronicity that has brought them together as gay artists, to an area with a large gay and lesbian population during painful times, to ask unanswerable questions. Their explorations and discoveries will be premiered in two new dance works at the Herbst Theater Oct. 10 and 11 at 8:30 p.m. For the second year Beck will share the stage with another gay choreographer, Gary Palmer and his dance company.

Beck has been choreographing adult works for more than 15 years, and co-founded Centerspace in Project Artaud almost 11 years ago. Beck calls his work "dance theater" because the visuals and theatrics of the work are as important as the movement.

"I work very intensely with the emotional material, not in a literal or storytelling way, but in an evocative and atmospheric way, working very deeply with human emotions of all kinds," he said. "The work has a very dream-like and ritual quality to it. It stirs feelings, memories, dreams, and emotions in the audience. A whole gamut of feelings and images are evoked in the psyches of those watching."

Hartman, whose explorations have crossed a wide gamut of experimental theater and music for more than 20 years, was the founder of the memorable and artistically outrageous 544 Natoma Performance Gallery. He connected with Beck when Beck came to 544 Natoma to work in collaboration with Robert Chesley on the dance/performance piece Nocturnes. Common interests, shared experiences, and mutual admiration have led Beck and Hartman to mutual inspiration and repeated collaborations.

Both Beck and Hartman acknowledge the importance of their sexuality on their ultimate creative expression.

"it's so clear to me, one of the main, if not the major aspect of being gay that has relevance for my art is the outsider perspective," said Beck. "Being gay, one is outside the mainstream culture and the expectations of society, sexually speaking. We're blessed with an opportunity to take the outsider's perspective, but that does not mean that it's an opportunity that all of us or even many of us are willing to take hold of. It means a lot of questioning, loneliness, and isolation. And most of us can only stand so much of that."

Hartman zeros in more.

"We use our gayness as an available technique to give us the objectivity to make a comment on society as a whole," said Hartman. "Straight artists have to find some other technique, but our sexuality is right in our hands as an available tool." We laugh at Peter's unintentional pun, but he has hit the nail on the head. Sexuality and creative output are inextricably intertwined for many gay artists.

They also found that they had studied and maintained an active interest in the work of psychiatrist Carl Jung. Jung's study of the unconscious, and the importance of archetypal energy along with myth and ritual, have given Beck and Hartman a common language and intuitive bond on which to base their collaborations. Although they work from a starting point, the work evolves, develops, and changes, and "takes on a life of its own.

"I'm completely surprised," muses Beck. This Dionysian process, from chaos to clarity, allows for the conception of new forms that would have been impossible for Beck or Hartman to "Our whole way of working together is built on a shared experience of something which I call 'the illuminating truth of expression," Hartman said. "This sense of sharing, when it comes from the heart, is an experience which is orgasmic in nature. It is that moment of truth that makes you know you're an artist. You do what you do because that's what you have to do. It is the only way you can collaborate and make anything out of it." For them, it is literally work that springs from the unconscious.

While Beck admits many people think dance is not for them, he sees this as an example of something very wrong that is happening in our culture.

"All the arts were once bound up together with priesthood and healing and intercession with the powers of the universe and dance was right there," Beck insists. "All intentional movement, after all, is a form of dance. It's at least as ancient, if not more, than any other art form. It also has enormous power because it is preverbal. Movement is what we do first, before we make sounds, think in words, or draw pictures. And that gives movement enormous archetypal and archaic power."

Beck sees his own dance theater creations as "work that partakes of theater in its archetypal sense as community ritual; as framed in that magic box of the theater where people go expecting something magical and transformative, exciting, new, and unusual to take place."

"That means that Christopher's work is a visual trip," Hartman teases. In a more serious vein, Hartman considers that

The New York City Ballet in Berkeley

Manners and Musicality

by Keith White

ew York City Ballet, the company founded by the late George Balanchine (and the largest ballet company in this hemisphere), came to Berkeley last week with orchestra in tow for its first Bay Area appearance in 24 years. For many of us, the performances comprised an initiation into the deeper mysteries of the Balanchine esthetic, which remains the operative and distinguishing force in this unique institution.

Some of the works on the three programs were familiar to us from the repertoires of other companies, or from televised performances by the New York City Ballet. When the curtain opened onto Serenade at the opening gala, there was a momentary sense of comfort in a well-known classic. But our adjustments to the company's style were immediately affected. Serenade looked different from when danced by the Atlanta Ballet or the Cleveland Ballet, or the many other companies which dance it.

NYCB dancers are almost all products of Balanchine's school, thus infusing Serenade with a unified sensibility one could only find in this company. This preparation for dancing Balanchine's works, appearing almost instinctive in most of the dancers, is both the strength of the New York City Ballet and one of the challenges to an uninitiated audience. Balanchine's choreography doesn't always look as difficult as it is. But there were major mishaps on each night I attended, slips and falls and missed lifts that are said to be common at NYCB performances, but which shocked the Berkeley audience on each occasion.

If Serenade looked different from what it had been before, Agon, which followed it, was a revelation. The prickly syncopations that had been approached with caution last year by dancers in the San Francisco Ballet were boldly attacked by NYCB dancers, who gave a surprising sense of joy and spontaneity to Agon's detached, irregular movements. In this and the other very complex Balanchine works given in Berkeley, the audience often seemed baffled and largely reserved its applause until the end of each ballet rather than clapping on impulse or, less likely, as a result of any pandering from the dancers, whose spontaneous communications with the audience are minimal and perhaps internally discouraged.

There is a mannerliness about these dancers that stems, undoubtedly, from the "no-star" policy we hear about at New York City Ballet. Actually, of course, there are stars; as in any large group of performers, those who excel stand out. But they stand out differently from principal dancers in other companies. While there are personalities, there are no characters, at least, not in the predominantly abstract ballets of Balanchine, who considered everyone, including himself as choreographer, to be secondary to the composer. Musicality and pure technical ability are therefore paramount.

In the Jerome Robbins ballets, which are more temporal, individuals seem motivated by more than the music. Robbins' Glass Pieces, to compositions by Philip Glass, has an unmistakable urban isolation that made the dancers seem more like contemporary human beings than neoclassical seraphim. And in his Dances at a Gathering, the dance oming Out Tonight!, the Vocal Minority's new offering, opened at the Intersection Sunday, Oct. 5, at 7:30 p.m. The show will be performed on three consecutive Sunday evenings, Oct. 12, 19, and 28. Considering the extraordinarily high quality of this production. high quality of this production, three performances is a ridicu-lously abbreviated run. Under the aegis of directors Bill Ganz and Matthew Inge, the Vocal Minority has never looked or sounded better.

Coming Out Tonight! is a little miracle of good taste and good fun which would be at home on any stage at any time, so perhaps if we all run down, buy our tickets, and applaud lustily, which is the least it deserves, Tinkerbelle will live and someone will have the good sense to extend it—indefinitely, I hope.

it—indefinitely, I hope.

Coming Out Tonight! abounds in good numbers. The evening opens with the title song, an affectionate reworking of "Comedy Tonight" from Sondheim's Forum, followed by "Everybody Says Don't," a song about repression from Anyone Can Whistle.

Soloist W. Gardner transforms "The Great Pretender" into the plaint of a closet transvestite, and "The Great Pretender" into the plaint of a closet transvestite, and accompanist Bob Bauer, who is backed by Eric Alman on drums and Clark Suprynowicz on bass, has produced a stunning new arrangement of Gershwin classic "How Long Has This Been Going On" ing On.

In the second half, Deb Clif-ford's rendition of "A Kiss In The Dark" manages to be both musically exciting and gently satirical, and Mark Benjamin delivers "Mama Look Sharp" in by a dying young Revolutionary War soldier in the musical 1776, is presented as a comment on AIDS. This is a bit of a jump, but who needs to be literal when you can listen to a voice like Ben-

Music director Ganz has kept the proceedings beautifully modulated, which simply means that the audience is neither that the audience is neither shouted at nor whispered to ex-cessively or at inappropriate moments, "Bridge Over Troubl-ed Water" has always made me slightly teary, and it's especially pleasant not to have it yelled in one's face as it so often is by small groups who think bigger is necessarily better. Some of the necessarily better. Some of the pieces are less interesting. "Powerhouse," despite its appropriate lyrics, is very much in the bland disco-70s mode, and "I Can See Clearly Now," which is combined with a forgettable, manically cheerful number called "Mornin," has definitely been done enough. But these are redeemed by the likes of "Ode to a Gym Teacher," which chronicles the saga of one of those gals who clings to her coach "like a leaf to a tree," and turns out to be "the gayest of all."

Past Vocal Minority produc-Past Vocal Minority produc-tions have not been noted for in-genious, or even competent, stag-ing. Special kudos go to stage director Inge, a veteran of the Broadway cast of Chorus Line, who provides imaginative con-texts for each song and knows how to keep the even entertained how to keep the eye entertained without distracting from full en-joyment of the music. His choreography is splendid, and—guess what?—the VM can also dance! Mr. Inge is obviously loaded with talent, and I hope he spreads it around.

Coming Out Tonight! is one of the best gay entertainments I've seen in several years. It is thoroughly professional without losing a whit of the spontaneous fun we have come to expect from this charming group. No more need be said but to be properly grateful for the hard work, dedication, and talent so clearly evident on the stage.

Congratulations all around.

You Come Too

he San Francisco Gay Men's Chorus gave an all-classical concert last Saturday at First Congregational Church, and fans found themselves, once again, searching for new words to praise the obvious dedication and serious musician ship which by now is the hallmark of all the Chorus' endeavors.

All the rich power of its sound remains intact, and the signs of meticulous preparation and genuine enjoyment soon overcame the sleep-inducing warmth of the evening and the quirky acoustics of the barn-like auditorium.

Any eyebrows raised at the high ambition of the program soon relaxed into rapt concentration as each selection was followed by another equally thoughtful and loving rendition. Monteverdi, Gabrielli, and Schubert were each accorded the same kind of rainstaking care usually received. painstaking care usually reserved by the Chorus for far more lighteight composers.

The smooth flow of the recital as uninterrupted. Each piece, whether a cappella or accompa-nied by excellent instrumental-ists, was given full measure. If there were some blurry consonants in the Schubert song "The Soul of Man is Like Water," they could be blamed on the hall, and momentary pitch problems dur-ing the first half were probably just nerves. The overwhelming impression was one of grace and

In a too-brief showcase set, The Chamber Chorus distin-guished itself with exquisite in-terpretations of two charming songs by Randall Thompson to words of Robert Frost. These intimate moments of reflection filled the room with a goatly. refilled the room with a gently evocative glow, tinged with just the right touch of sentimentality. Ted Printz is the attractive and accomplished leader of the Chamber singers, doubling as section leader for second tenors. He's a good example of the wealth of talented riches the Chorus enjoys.

When the general level of performance is this high it becomes repetitive pointing out special moments, but the first half finale, a lovely curio by Amy Beach called "The Chambered Nautilus," must be mentioned.

With words by no less than Oliver Wendell Holmes, this tone poem is something of a mini can-tata, filled with the sort of heady romanticism so favored by the Victorians. There are hints of Debussy and Vaughn Williams, but Beach had a voice of her own,

ACT for Art's Sake

by Steve Warren

he "new" A.C.T. debuts with a hit. Stephen Sond-heim and James Lapine's Sunday in the Park with George is the perfect show if you like your musicals to be about something. It's full of brilliant observations about art and artists, but you don't have to be an artist to relate to the story of a person too ab-sorbed in a career to take time for relationships. So writes the lonely critic late at night, alone in his apartment.

Act One is complete in itself, showing Georges Seurat putting together his greatest painting while his private life falls apart. Every character in the picture tells a story as Georges' mistress tells a story as Georges' mistress Dot, frustrated by his inability to Dot, trustrated by his inability to show love in any way but painting her, marries a baker to give Georges' baby a father. The finale, as the painting is completed, is too busy to be as exhilarating as it can be.

Like The Fantasticks, the second act starts with the previous perfection slowly unraveling. Then we jump forward a hundred years to find Seurat's great-grandson unveiling his latest piece of techno-sculpture and uncertain of what to do next. As Georges was criticized for chang-Georges was criticized for chang-ing too much, George is accused of repeating himself. His great-grandfather's words come back to inspire him as the curtain falls. This act lacks the cohesion and momentum of the first, but it leads to a happy if vague ending.

Jeff Keller is so good as the two artists that Melanie Chartoff (Dot, Marie) seems weaker than she is by comparison. Certainly her lovely but thin voice has trou-ble getting past the orchestra at times, unlike Keller's rich, boom-ing baritone. Tops in the support-ing cast are Ruth Kobart, Drew Eshelman, and Douglas Sills.

The show's physical requirements are one reason the Broadway production never toured. A.C.T., working from scratch, has mounted it in grand style. No la-sers maybe, but they always seem-ed silly anyway. Derek Duarte's lighting merits special mention, but the scenery and costumes are also excellent.

Director Laird Williamson has to take the blame for the im-balance between the leads and to balance between the leads and to share responsibility with the writ-ers for the letdown that occurs around the middle of the second act. He also gets a good chunk of credit for how well most of the show works. If you've only seen the televersion of the Broadway production you have no idea how much you missed by not having the full stage in view at all times

It was contrary to Seurat's theory that the viewer's eye should do the work.

While it would have been nice to have Sunday in the Park with George around during the Impressionists' exhibition, it's interesting that it's running simultaneously with Derek Jarman's Caravaggio film. Both are speculative fictions about artists of the lative fictions about artists of the past created by artists of the present. Sondheim's work is by far the most accessible, entertaining, intelligent, and insightful. It's just not as kinky as Jarman's.

Connecting With Creation

he arrival of Sunday In The Park With George in San Francisco has been anticipated with the excitement and veneration usually reserved and veneration usually reserved for a show of Old Masters at the De Young. And why not? It was evident upon the show's New York opening in 1984 that this was a work which couldn't be judged along the lines of more usual, commercial Broadway fare. In all aspects, this explora-tion of the artistic urge was a work of art itself. While partisans embraced the maturity of its story, the revelations of its vision, and the creative handsomeness of its production, detractors bemoaned an arid romance, a seem-ingly unconnected second act, and (worst of all) the lack of hummable tunes.

How thrilling, then, to find in its arrival as opener for the new ACT season (and hopeful harbinger for a new era of creativity and expansiveness for the theater), not merely a vindication for the show's adherents or a recreation of the original production. The ACT Sunday is a rich and full experience, more physically beautiful in its design and emotionally rewarding in its char-acter's relationships than previ-ous knowledge of the work could have led us to expect. Although the long first act could move swifter in its dialogue scenes, this Sunday is a singular, breathtaking journey into the possibilities of the musical, culminating in an ineffably memorable and mystical scene of creation, which, like the finest painting and literature, will resonate and deepen in our

This is a tribute to director Laird Williamson and his talented ensemble of singing actors. The story, as is probably known by now, has little basis in historical fact, but allows author nistorical fact, but allows author Lapine and lyricist/composer Sondheim to fantasize on the throes of the creative experience of an artist—in this case, French pointillist Georges Seurat—and the affect on personal relationships of the artists' absorption in his work. The two acts of Sunday occur 100 years apart, Seurat in 1866 creating a masterwork and, in Act Two, his grandson in 1986 trying to resolve an impasse in his creative work.

As Seurat, the craggily handsome Jeff Keller sings with full resonance and conveys eloquent emotions running beneath his few words; his anguish and subsequent rejuvenation in Act Two are particularly well pictured. Al-though charming and capable in though charming and capable in her dialogue scenes, Melanie Chartoff, as Seurat's mistress, is not fully up to the musical demands of an admittedly diffi-cult score. Basically an ingenue, Chartoff lacks a mature "theater voice" and the thrust of emotional power to fulfill the music's

Still, director Williamson has succeeded in making the central relationship of this pair warm and sympathetic. This is particularly important in linking the two acts together. Georges, the spiritude of artistic genius forcing seizure of artistic genius forcing him to create something new, slights his mistress although he loves her. His cry, "Connect, Georges," call him to his work. In Act Two, the modern George has run into a dead-end of fad and trend; his cry of "Connect" is an attempt to reach the nourish-ment of a contact with humanity which will replenish his energy uring the 1970s, many gay men discovered the safety of ghettos like the Castro provided a curious feeling of immortality. Since their biological clocks were no longer being measured by the annual progress of the children in their nuclear families — most of the rituals surrounding birthdays, school years, summer camp, weddings, and anniversaries had been conveniently replaced with tea dances, drugs, orgies, and Sunday brunch — some developed a dangerously false sense of security. Many of those who did a spectacular job of refusing to grow up became convinced they had joined Peter Pan and his tribe of little lost boys in the gay version of Never Never Land. Some even tried to believe they would never grow old and that, unless struck by lightning at Trocadero Transfer, would never die. Why not? Because those things only happened to other people. Old people. Ugly people. Straight people. Until, of course, the debut of the AIDS virus.

About a year ago, I started to maintain a list of friends and acquaintances who had either been diagnosed or had died of AIDS. When I first mentioned my list to someone, he was absolutely horrified that I would do such a thing. But I strongly believed—and still feel—that the best way to keep from forgetting these people is to find some means of keeping their memories alive in my mind.

Unfortunately, "Out of sight, out of mind," is a credo by which too many people prefer to live their lives and, in today's fastmoving society, it's all too easy to succumb to the temptation of forgetting who your friends are. Or were. My AIDS list now contains the names of approximately 30 men who have been diagnosed and another 30 who have died. Although, when compared to some other people's losses, this list is small, one fact remains frighteningly clear in my mind. None of those men deserved to die an early death. No one ever does.

DRINKING WHILE DRIVING

Last fall, when I traveled to New Orleans for the first time in my life, something very strange happened. I had always longed to visit this city (its history intrigues me) and yet, upon arriving and not knowing precisely what it was I expected to find, I soon discovered that what I ay before me was not at all what I had hoped to see. Much the same feeling came over me last summer during a performance of William Mayer's A Death in The Family. Although I had previously heard a tape of this opera and been fascinated by its score, the Opera Theatre of St. Louis' well-planned production turned out to be a major disappointment.

What happened? For one thing, most of the people in the audience knew they were being handed a real downer and, since people basically don't want to hear bad news, the mere mention of the title, A Death in The Family, was a sure signal that the evening was not destined to be a romp and a frolic. With the added knowledge that the opera's alcoholic hero, Jay, will soon be killed in a car crash, the performance became a continued downer. The ulitmate disappointment, I suppose, was that despite John Conklin's unit set and Rhoda Levine's astute direction, the opera suffered from containing far too much narrative and exposition. This problem often occurs with new operas involving adaptations, and I fear the situation here was further complicated by the fact that composer William Mayer — who also wrote the opera's libretto — seemed to have had quite a lot of trouble making cuts.

While there is indeed some beautiful music in Mayer's score, A Death in The Family simply implodes under its own weight. Nevertheless, I enjoyed Jake Gardner's touchingly masculine performance as Jay and Judith Christin's wonderfully sensitive portrayal of Aunt Hannah. Young Jeremy Cummins was extremely appealing as little Rufus and Dawn Upshaw gave an impressive performance as his mother.

TEACHING BABY NOT TO SWIM

This fall, the San Francisco

'What makes you think I'm the one who killed the little rug rat?' asks Kostelnicka (Leonie Rysanek) in Leos Janacek's Jenufa.

Opera's revival of Jenufa, while suffering some weak moments in Wolfgang Weber's stage direction, nevertheless made the most out of depression and despair. Like A Death in The Family, Los Janacek's peasant opera (in which a stern and frustrated old woman drowns her baby grandson in hopes of erasing the societal shame which would otherwise accompany the child's illegitimate birth) is not exactly Hello, Dolly! But when given proper attention, it can pack an operatic rabbit punch.

Although Wieslaw Ochman's Laca and Li-Chan Chen's Jano were important artistic contributions, Neil Rosenshein's Steva was most disappointing. The three strongest features of this revival were soprano Gabriela Benackova's sensitive portrayal of the unfortunate heroine, Leonie Rysanek's obsessive histrionics as the anguished, misguided Kostelnicka, and Charles Mackerras' superb conducting.

For Benackova, whose radiant and healthy soprano easily charmed the audience, this Jenufa production offered an impressive local debut. For Rysanek, the role of the Kostelnicka marked another important and wise shift in repertoire. Although this greatly beloved singer is now nearing 60, she is one of those rare operatic figures who has kept her voice and artistry in good shape. More than merely aging gracefully, Rysanek has courageously chosen to explore new repertory — roles which will suit the changes in her voice and dramatic presence — during the twillight years of a magnificent career. Her path of action involves taking great risks, risks which most other artists would avoid like the plague. But Rysanek is, has been, and always will be an artist of amazing commitment.

A Janacek scholar, conductor Charles Mackerras resurrected the composer's original orchestrations, thus adding a brutal brilliance to the score. Because Jenufa was sung here in the original Czech, the use of Supertitles was more than welcome. Indeed, largely due to the combined effects of Benackova, Rysanek, Mackerras, and Supertitles, the San Francisco Opera's revival of Jenufa proved to be a far more exciting experience than the Met's lame and laggardly English version last year.

Fashion for Hospice

The Beach Blanket Babylon Garden at Coming Home Hospice will be the beneficiary of the 10th Anniversary Collection of Jeanne-Marc and Celebration with Saks Fifth Avenue Oct. 6. The fashion show will feature a retrospective of famous designs. It will be held at Club Fugazi, 678 Green St. A champagne reception will begin at 7 p.m. and the show will begin at 8 p.m.

Directed and choreographed by Steve Silver, the show will celebrate the business and friendship shared by Saks Fifth Avenue and Jeanne-Marc, whose bright, crayon-colored, patchwork designs first appeared in the store in 1976.

Jeanne-Marc will offer highest honors to the oldest Bird Jacket in the audience — a popular design from ten years ago — and Saks Fifth Avenue will award a special prize to the oldest Jeanne-Marc outfit at the celebration. This event's proceeds will enable Coming Home Hospice to have a protected outdoor setting for residents and their guests.

Mayor Dianne Feinstein, Cyril Magnin, and Charlotte Mailliard serve as Honorary Co-Chairmen for the benefit, with Silver as Chairman. Tickets are $50 and available by calling 543-5414.

Those wishing to make a donation to the special garden should make checks payable to: Beach Blanket Babylon Hospice Garden and mail to the Development Office, Coming Home Hospice, 25 30th St., S.F., 94131.

A Daddy and Two Old Granddads ince I became addicted at the age of five, people have been trying to persuade me there's more to life than movies. Occasionally something happens to make me suspect they're right. After seeing Life of the Party at Theatre Rhinoceros I would simply like to nominate playwright Doug Holsclaw for knighthood—or the gay equivalent.

Musically we have the Flips, a zany, inventive, a cappella quartet who sound rather like Manhattan Transfer singing on a street corner. With largely original materials they duplicate or improve upon the best harmonies of the '40s through '60s. These two men and two women have found a steady gig, Saturdays at midnight at the new City Cabaret.

Now on to what they pay me for I can't say I'm tired of movies starring pretty young men, but there are other tastes to be considered. "Hoges" is here if you're into daddies, and Burt and Kirk if you want granddaddies.

'PLAY' IS HARD WORK

In Shadow Play playwright Dee Wallace Stone leaves New York for a Pacific Northwestern island to find out why the man she loved killed himself seven years before. Cloris Leachman was his mother, which might be reason enough, but this is supposed to be a ghost story. Director Susan Shadburne shows non-sexual closeness between women at every opportunity. By the end Stone gets over her writer's block and finishes a script in verse that sounds even more boring and pretentious than Shadow Play. (Area theaters)

OUT OF UNIFORM

Sigourney Weaver is about the only reason to see the minor romantic thriller Half Moon Street, especially if you want to view the body she concealed under a uniform in Aliens. She plays a vegetarian feminist call girl who is also the world's only underpaid doctor. Her intelligence intimidates most men, except politician Michael Caine, who is secretly negotiating peace in the Middle East. Despite hints of foreboding as everyone acts suspiciously, nothing happens for over an hour. The ending doesn't explain much, but leaves you mildly satisfied after you've been mildly entertained for 90 minutes. (Galaxy, Serramonte, Tanforan)

JUNIOR BIRDMAN

The Boy Who Could Fly is a glorified afterschool special, a hypersensitive dramatic attempt to help children cope with Real Problems. Generally well directed by Nick (The Last Starfighter) Castle from his own heavyhanded script, it boasts fine performances by Bonnie Bedelia, Colleen Dewhurst, and Louise Fletcher, but Fred Gwynne overplays horribly and the very Jewish Mindy Cohn is laughably miscast as a Catholic girl.

Pretty Lucy Deakins, who will be drooled over by horny teenaged boys and lesbians of all ages, moves in with her recently widowed mother (Bedelia) and little brother Fred Savage, a military fetishist, next door to Jay Underwood, a troubled teen who "has never spoken a word in his life and he doesn't like to be around people." Lucy breaks through to the boy, who seems to think he can fly though his body is hardly streamlined.

I'm a sucker for this kind of sappy romantic movie when it's done right. The Boy Who Could Fly is so obvious and transparent I doubt even kids will fall for it. (Galaxy, Stonestown, Century Plaza)

DIRE ABBEY

It took four writers to adapt a so-called "unreadable" novel for the screen. Obviously some compromises had to be made, which in turn have compromised the finished product, but at least The Name of the Rose isn't unwatch-able.

One faction apparently wanted to preserve the intellectual integrity of this multileveled mystery, including the theological disputes behind the commission and solution of a series of murders in a 14th century abbey. Another side wanted to get down, to have fun with the story by making investigator Sean Connery a former-day Sherlock Holmes ("My dear Adso, it's elementary") and adding a fiery climax out of a Roger Corman Poemovie.

Perhaps most important for us, there was a strong voice in favor of exploring the sexuality of the monks of the period. Cooler heads kept this from getting too blatant, with only one monk (Michael Habeck) identified as gay: "Brother Berengar was inverted in many ways." After the first murder William Hickey exclaims, "The devil is hurling beautiful boys out of windows! There was something feminine, something diabolical about the young one who died." The second victim, a friend of the first, is also young and attractive, but we are assured, "Flesh can be tempted according to nature or against nature, and they were not of the latter disposition."

Connery travels with 16-yearold novice Christian Slater, but holding his hand as he goes to sleep is as physical as he gets with the boy — on camera. When Slater has sex with a woman his mentor quotes Ecclesiastes: "More bitter than death is woman." In the end the lad has to choose between female flesh and the allmale monastic life. "I've never regretted the choice I made," he tells us.

I doubt director Jean-Jacques Annaud will be able to say that about The Name of the Rose. By hedging his bets to make a movie no one will hate, he's also made sure no one will love it. (Metro, Grand Lake)

HURT SO GOOD

The problems of the differently abled are a staple of movies for television. Children of a Lesser God made it to the big screen because its source was a Tonywinning play by Mark Medoff.

William Hurt plays a teacher of deaf children who falls in love with former student Marlee Matlin. She works as a cleaning woman because she's too proud and/or frightened to be assimilated into the world of the hearing by learning to lip-read and speak.

The play raised too many arguments, personal and political, for an audience to consider. The film version, like last year's Agnes of God, goes too far toward oversimplification, in this case giving us pretty visuals and a boy-getsgirl ending.

Matlin is used for most of the visuals, sexily backlit, dancing and shot in or near water like a hearing-impaired Jennifer Beals. One visual element not taken advantage of — and here director Randa Haines reveals her video background — is the beauty of sign language. Hands fly off the screen in all directions as she keeps her stars in close-up. In the most frustrating scene Hurt tries to show Matlin what a piece of music feels like. He acts with his whole body but we see just his head and chest. If he fails to win a companion for his Oscar he can blame Haines for concealing half his performance. His co-star, too, suffers from this handicap, and she doesn't have her voice to fall back on as Hurt effectively verbalizes both their roles. Matlin may win an Oscar anyway, because it's that kind of part.

Those who saw the play will miss the part where "veal" is explained in sign as "dead cow baby," It's led up to but dropped. When Hurt goes underwater to "hear" Matlin's silence the soundtrack blares music at us instead of letting us share his experience. The Canadian location is half-disguised, with a classroom's decor featuring two spellings of "favo(u)rite."

Despite these nits, large and small, I recommend Children of a Lesser God for what we can see of its acting and for the few issues it brings up, even if it doesn't explore them thoroughly. (Regency I, Plaza)

BJORN, PAUL, GEORGE &

Sean Connery sleuths in a 14th-century monastery in The Twist and Shout is a Danish compendium of cliches from "serious" teenage movies — first love, jealousy, abortion, problems with parents, and of course rock and roll.

The year is 1963. The characters are introduced somewhat awkwardly, but we come to know Bjorn, Erik, Kirsten, and Anna. Kirsten loves Bjorn, who loves Anna. Erik doesn't have a lot of friends because his cruel father makes him care for his invalid mother, but Bjorn is his best buddv.

In the first few minutes the Beatles are used to establish the period, with their music and fashions having a pervasive effect on Danish youth. They're practically forgotten once Bjorn connects with Anna and we hear no more about his garage band, the Sealions (sic).

Co-writer and director Bille August, to whose Zappa this is a sequel, brings very little humor into play in this story which keeps the emphasis on angst. Adam Tonsberg, who plays Bjorn, is a cute blue-eyed blond who keeps the film watchable but can't make it interesting. (Cannery)

OUTBACK WETBACK

I wouldn't trade Ferris Bueller for Crocodile Dundee, but those of you who are tired of teenage and pre-teen heroes will acclaim the ''daddy'' of the year, Paul Hogan, as the movies' new sex symbol. His TV spots (''I'll throw another shrimp on the barbie for you'') have done a lot for Australian tourism, and his feature film debut is cannily calculated for at least bicultural appeal.

The laughs begin in Australia where Crocodile Dundee (Hogan), a lovable, legendary semifraud, takes New York journalist Linda Kozlowski on safari. She reciprocates by inviting him back to Manhattan where he subdues muggers as easily as crocodiles. Kozlowski is engaged to Mark Blum, a major yuppie asshole; but this being a movie it's just a matter of time until her great white hunter fantasies come true,

Affectionate Interlude

Joseph and the Old Man by Christopher Davis St. Martin's Press, $13.95 by Bob Thompson

hristopher Davis has created a world in Joseph and the Old Man in which the reader urgently wants to immerse himself. It is the story of Old Man, as he is affectionately known, an aging literary lion (who in his heyday hobnobbed with Gertrude Stein, Alice Toklas, and T.S. Eliot) and his lover Joe, a handsome teacher and writer who is 30 years younger. It is summer on Fire Island and the two lovers have opened their beach house and plan to spend the summer writing, reading, swimming, and relaxing with regular summer acquaintances. The relationshoin between the regular summer acquantances.

The relationshoip between the Old Man and Joe is strong and affectionate, though many islanders assume "the old man must pay him," and "if they did not say it they often thought it, and whether they said it or thought it, they were wrong." Davis does a fine job letting the reader see their daily lives and observe their love for one another, built over the ten years of their marriage. It is a marriage that has stood the test of time as well as the hostility of Joe's father, and the silence of his family.

But try as one may to enter the world of the Old Man, Joe, and their Fire Island friends, it is a difficult journey. Davis' prose is often jarring, often irritating: "He might have stayed longer but a young man and a young woman who were holding hands appeared on the walk. They stopped and looked at the little old man sitting on the bench and then they stood a little way up the walk and the young man leaned back against the wall and the young woman leaned into him and they embraced tightly. The old man stood up and followed the boardwalk down the hill. When he reached the bottom he was in a depression between the high place where he had just been and the high dunes toward the sea. He looked back and saw the young man and young woman huddled together on the beach where he had been sitting, and he climbed the steps over the dunes and descended to the sea."

I am tempted to ask, The old sea or the young sea?

Also, Davis tends to baldly tell the reader what a character is thinking, rather than developing a character so fully that the reader knows what the character would think about a particular idea or situation: "He thought about the sea," "thought of the gull's dying moments," "thought about the previous day," "thought about the previous day," "thought about the things he would do," "thought about the things he would do," "thought about Joe," "thought about Joe," "thought about Joe," "thought about otters swim," "thought about otters sagain." All that thinking in only four pages and still we don't know much about the old man. What did he think about Stein? How did the gull's dying make him feel? What did he think when he thought of Joe? By exploring more deeply these "thoughts" Davis might create a gay character of depth, a character into whose soul we see through a journey into his most personal thoughts. Unfortunately, what we get is superficiality.

But there is much in this first novel to recommend it. The sections where the Old Man is reminiscing about meeting Joe are, by turn, funny, moving, and insightful. Here the Old Man is trying to describe the forces that brought him and Joe together: "It's almost like fate. Not the god-determined fate of the Greeks, but the fact that many times in life we make decisions that will make our lives go one way or another, and once the decision is made there is no turning back."

However, an accident leaves the Old Man alone with only the solace of the ocean and friends to comfort him, the stability and companionship that Joe provided gone. Davis shows us the Old Man's terror at being without his lover and his apprehension at once again meeting Joe's family. The brief confrontation between Joe's father and the Old Man is tense: "'How can God let this happen to someone in the prime of his life, someone who had so much living to do,' he said suddenly. 'Why didn't he take you? You're just an old faggot; your life is almost over.'"

Ultimately this is the Old Man's story that Davis tells—a small part of the journey that has been his life, an interlude of love and affection he knows he was lucky to experience. While the author's prose often detracts from the story, it is nonetheless a satisfying book for its portrayal of this positive, affectionate love between Joseph and the Old Man.

The forthcoming Ms. Leather of SF and Intl. Ms. Leather conof SY and Intl. Ms. Leather con-tests have generated a lot of dialogue since the producers have sent out letters soliciting donations to help put on the event. It has generated both good and bad dialogue, the main thing being that South of Market men want to know why the events are being held in North of Market establishments. I am not involved in the production or planning of this event nor have I been asked to be a part of it, so please direct any and all questions you have regarding these events to the producers by writing Mistress Kathy, Intl. he Castro Street fair is once again history. Even though the other papers billed it as tame and quiet with just a couple of bare-breasted women sashaying through the crowd, of course they wouldn't ever say the men were just as brazen, but then again we owe it to ourselves to give them something to write about! If the reason they think it was tame was the lack of lawnchairs in front of the Castro Station, or the fact that we were a bit exhausted by the time we made the rounds of the fair, then maybe it was. However the day went, I thought it was great fun and certainly had the cooperation of the weather and the pretty people behind it, and yes that means you!

The weekend was also a good one for the Godfather Service Fund. There was shop-a-thon at So-Lo Supermarket at Bush and Larkin, with hot dog sales and groceries, a booming business for the G.S.F. The cooperation of the So-Lo employees and the G.S.F. volunteers was a great thing to see as they bought hot dogs and we bought groceries.
The final totals have not been released yet, but it looked like a good day for So-Lo and the G.S.F., with a good time for all involved!

Beck & Co.

Beck's work, "theatrically be-Beck's work, 'Theatricany be-comes epic because it's dealing with large issues in big state-ments. It's a huge brush making great big strokes on stage.''

This becomes clear as we dis cuss the work to be premiered. One piece is called Judgement and incorporates such ideas as condemnation, reprieve, gossip, prejudice, integration, suspicion, guilt, isolation, and compassion. The second piece, untitled as yet, the preciousness of the human, and the power of the non-human and lunar qualities of life.

Our discussion leads naturally to a discussion of the times we are living in and the resulting effect on work being created by gay artists

"I think these times are ex-tremely hazardous, but it re-quires enormous risk, a leap into the void, or a dying in some form or another in order for there to be transformation," Beck said. "It's also essential to realize that there is an enormous beauty even in the darkest, ostensibly depressing tragedy. It's a very hard beauty to see, but I think it's essential, especially in depressing, difficult, and turmoil-filled times like ours, to find ways of acknowledging and recognizing the beauty there is in the human being in extremity, trying to come to grips with life and trying to make sense of it and keep it balanced."

Beck and Hartman seem to be offering two visions. One is a crystallization of the times we are living in; some essential elements and truths that focus and ments and truths that focus and describe these days. At the same time they are pushing bounda-ries, exploring into the unknown for new ideas.

"We're not offering any solu-tions," Hartman said. "We're trying to evoke a wider, a more open sensitivity to that which is going on around us. It is perhaps armed with a few new tools to be able to build our own futures from it."

But the first step to healing is But the first step to hearing is acknowledgement of the pain, or as Christopher put it, in Jungian terms, "One has to recognize what one calls the shadow, in orwhat one calls the shadow, in order to move towards wellness."
Hartman adds, "Healing speaks from the wound." And Christopher responds, "And the shadow and the wound are there in the middle of the work." It is the times we are living, the air we are breathing, the food we are eating, and the sex we are or are not having. There is nowhere to run away from it. " from it.

Beck and Hartman agree that their work is likely to be challenging to some people, but they also know that "Catharsis is what you can get from our work. We have to offer people the excitement of discovery in their relationships to the work; the whole world of creative expressive movement in themselves. Something is opened in the observer. People's lives are changed and affected. For those that find stimulus in being deep-ly moved, we're offering a turnon. We hope that, in some way, our work will help people survive."

Still, Balanchine's ballets constitute the bulk of NYCB's repertory, and its dancers most often serve a plotless neoclassical vi-sion. Part of this vision involves the primacy of the ballerina, which accounts not only for better women's roles and usually many more women than men on stage at any given time, but also for stronger and more interesting women dancers generally; there are perhaps a dozen ballerinas of exceptional ability. The NYCB men are more than competent, certainly, and have a greater stylistic unity than one normally sees in male ballet contingents. But there are no matinee idols. The closest approximation is the handsome, dutiful Sean Lavery. Most of the male principals and soloists are polite WASP poets devoid of much sensuality, with the exceptions of Mel A. Tomlin-son, formerly of Dance Theatre son, formerly of Dance Theatre of Harlem, and the exotic-looking Jock Soto, whose smouldering
Agon pas de deux with Heather
Watts created something of a sensation at the gala performance. At the corps de ballet level, a great variety prevails among the men, including several homely faces that seem almost out of place on a ballet stage, but even they produce dancing as clear as light. NYCB has no unpretty

LIFTERS • MARINES • CHICKE

Accustomed as I am to companies with internally cultivated male and female star personali-ties and repertories of works by multiple choreographers, I found NYCB somewhat lacking in the-atrical dimension while offering a heady distillation of classical ballet traditions. Balanchine's particular displacement of values facilitates an impression of de-mocracy that is demonstrably supportive of his choreography. In a ballet like Divertimento No. 15, in which five ballerinas and three cavaliers dance variations of increasing complexity, the sheer amount of choreographic material pre-empts star turns while, in the final analysis, every-one involved has performed at the very highest level.

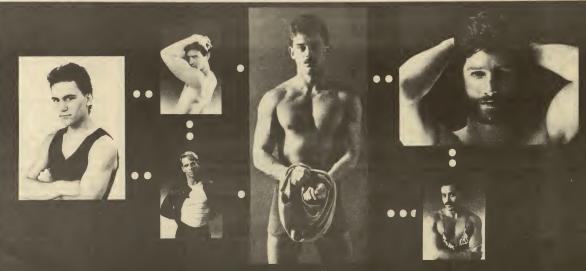

Some ballets, like the Stravin-sky Symphony in Three Movements (with three principal cou-ples, five soloist couples, and a female corps of 16) are so dense with information that a single viewing seems almost worthless. As Arlene Croce remarked in her Thursday afternoon lecture in association with the perform-ances, Balanchine made works "consciously shaped to please an audience, though not dominated by the audience's taste." I have the further impression that in his own company Balanchine meant to challenge and change the au-dience's perceptions as surely as he meant to entertain. Becoming accustomed to a subtler esthetic requires a suspension of expectations and a heightening of sensi-tivity, a process the company's Berkeley visit barely began. Hopefully we won't have to wait another 24 years to continue it.

Beside the economic factors so sharply mocked by Sondheim, the arts of the 20th century have been marked by a progressive in-tellectualization. The second act of this show provides, if not the antidote to this problem, then at least a partial cure, as well as the show's stunning finale, in which the dead-ends of fad and intellectualization are discarded in favor of the intuitive and emotional

For while the story of Sunday may be that of the relationship between Seurat and his mistress, between Seurat and his mistress, the substance of the show, and its great wonder, comes from its delving into the mysteries of creation. We see the artist struggle to find his vision, fight to capture it, and then glory in his ability to therefore freeze a moment in time. "I revise the world," says Georges, who is unafraid to take the world apart and put it togethe the world apart and put it together for himself. This is the ultimate glory of Sunday In The Park: it provokes us to analyze the act of creation even as we en-

A last note. You'll notice many well-known younger talents in the show: Elizabeth Padilla, coming of age after Beach Blanket Babylon; Liam O'Brien, a hit at Theatre Rhinoceros and the Magic Theatre; and cabaret performers James Meade and Mary Jo McConnell. And, oh yes—the handsome Douglas Sills, generously featured as Louis the Baker, makes it quite obvious why makes it quite obvious why "Everybody Loves Louis."

funnier, more romantic, and perhaps therefore more moving than the New York production. It takes some concentration, yes, but pays off by making us active participants in the artistic process. The authors write that the whole secret is in "putting it together." In Sunday, we see the amazing act of it coming together, and then delight in the finished work. It is equipous and exhibitating the curious and exhilarating, the only musical you'll ever leave feeling like an artist yourself.

Chorus

and one must admire the taste and scholarship of Director
Gregg Tallman for programming her. Jim Murnan's ringing baritone and the sweet purity of Tom Rice's tenor pierced the lush choral fabric in splendid solos, and the instrumental contributions added color and nuance to the rich score. A real treat, beautifully served!

Of course, the big news of the evening was the premiere of local composer David Conte's "Invocation and Dance," the first work commissioned by the Chorus in its eight-year history. It's high time the Chorus sought a signature tune of its own and, luckily, it has struck upon a first-rate melodist on the first try.

melodist on the first try.

Based on excerpts from Walt Whitman's "When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd" this immediately likeable piece is a bit of a throwback. Conte's harmonic language is hardly daring and he seems unaffected by most modern trends, but his appeal is direct and invigorating and the rect and invigorating, and the assurance of the writing is plea-surable. The rhythmic ostinato and percussive punctuation vaguely recalls Carl Orff, though I found myself thinking more of the snappy exhilaration of Leon-ard Bernstein's "Mass."

The Chorus and Tallman were happily unconcerned with influences, and they tore into the score with window-rattling relish. The brief "Invocation" may be slight-ly more interesting, but the jazzy, joyous "Dance" is undeniably thrilling, and the performers re-paid Conte's effort with the kind of unabashed enthusiasm com-posers dream of.

The shouts of approval raised throughout the hall were heart-felt and Tallman proceeded to encore the entire second movement to great effect, the cries of "Love!" and "Life!" echoing marvelously.

'The shouts of approval raised throughout the hall were heartfelt.

Later, I wondered at the Cho-rus and its ability to touch me so deeply. I thought of a line from Thompson's "The Pasture," which the Chamber Singers had done so well. The narrator goes to the pasture for some light chores and a nature walk, invit-ing, "You Come Too." The Chorus does the work, inviting our appreciation and company along the way. We come too, joining in the joy of their undertaking.

despite the fact that neither could realistically survive for long in the other's milieu.

Hogan was born to be a macho screen hero — a garrulous Gary Cooper with John Wayne's fists and Clark Gable's warm, sexy sense of humor.

For such a hetero story Crocodile Dundee has a lot of gay material. Hogan kisses a man — not romantically — in a very funny scene, and takes part in an allmale aboriginal ritual involving dancing and — the rest is left to our imagination. Later, after nearly being picked up by a transvestite, he learns to grope any New Yorkers he's not sure of

A lot of the culture-clash stuff is old-hat and silly, but Hogan rises above the material when he has to. Crocodile Dundee eclipsed E.T. in Australia in its first three months. It won't be that big here, but this new screen hero should find a large, receptive American audience.

Of course a year ago I said the same thing about Remo Williams. (Regency 2, Century Plaza 8)

THE GOLDEN BOYS

In Tough Guys Burt Lancaster, 72, and Kirk Douglas, 67, renounce their senior citizenship over the way old people are treated in this country — sometimes like children and sometimes like shit.

"The last guys in America to rob a train," they've spent the last 30 years in prison. They suffer the expected future shock to find that punks have taken over the streets and their favorite bar has gone gay.

The bar episode, with Matthew Faison trying to pick Kirk up, is played for nonjudgmental laughs; but Douglas is hit on next by homophobic gym manager Darlanne Fleugel, who is old enough to be his granddaughter; "It's nice to have a real man around here for a change. Usually there's nothing but gays." With that attitude, honey, you're lucky to have anyone.

lucky to have anyone.

Well, Darlane brings Kirk into the present, while Burt finds old flame Alexis Smith is willing to live with him in the past. The saddest moment in this upbeat film comes when probation officer Dana Carvey tells our heroes that after 30 years as cellmates and longer as friends, they "can't see each other for three years" because of the law against parolees associating with known felons.

The point is conveniently forgotten as quickly as it was established.

The point of all this prologue is to get these "Golden Boys" into an action climax, hijacking the train they had once robbed as it makes its final run. Kirk does some of his own stunts, including mooning from atop the moving train, and was also production consultant under his real name.

For all the real problems it deals with, Tough Guys never transcends the movie screen to suggest reality. If you'll settle for a live-action cartoon, it will show you a good time. (Regency 3, Empire)

WORST FRIENDS

We all have friends we don't like, and Delphine in Eric Rohmer's Summer combines the most irritating aspects of all of them. It's a tribute to Marie Rivière's performance that I spent much of the 96 minutes wanting to strangle her, while a part of me kept imagining what Lily Tomlin could do with the role.

When Delphine's vacation plans fall through she mopes around until her family and friends offer her alternatives. If there's anything she hates more than traveling alone it's taking part in group activities when she gets somewhere. She's the kind who waits until dinner is served to announce she's a vegetarian. Why everyone is so nice to her (no one says, "Starve, bitch!") is hard to fathom until we think about similar people in our own lives, perhaps even a bit of Delphine in ourselves.

Long after you've concluded that she was meant to be alone but is frustrated by society's mandate that no one should be, Delphine suddenly and incredibly mellows and becomes human by the fadeout.

Summer has the virtues and flaws, mostly flaws, of improvisation, which Rohmer relies on more heavily than ever before; but in general it has the pluses and minuses of most Rohmer films, so the final balance is on the plus side. (Opera Plaza)

A Cruise To Remember '87

Rita Moreno, Gotham, and Celeste have been signed by RSVP Travel Productions to headline the entertainment on its February and March sailings of A Cruise To Remember '87 aboard the SS Bermuda Star.

Rita Moreno is the only female performer to have won all four of the most prestigious show business awards. Her stage and screen characterization of Googie Gomez, a lady of little talent and great courage, in "The Ritz," the delightful farce set in a New York City bathouse, made Ms. Moreno a favorite with gay audiences. Her show-stopper performance at the Hollywood Bowl as star entertainer for the 1984 Christopher Street West Festival brought the audience to its feet calling for encore after encore.

The trio of Gotham which split after a phenomenal rise to success in the '70s, has recently rebanded to the delight of audiences and critics alike. So where have they been for the last five years? "At the Betty Ford Clinic collecting autographs," they say.

Celeste, the comedienne' singer who created many memorable moments on RSVP's A Cruise To Remember '86, returns as Entertainment Hostess. Sailors on the '86 cruise will recall the crowd spilling out of the ship's elegant Observatory Lounge into the passageway in effort to catch her nightly midnight show.

RSVP Travel Productions is a wholesale tour operator providing travel events to the gay travel market through travel agents nationwide. For more information write to: RSVP Travel Productions, Inc., 2800 University Ave. S.E., Minneapolis, Min. 55414.

Frameline to Benefit SF CAN/ Stop LaRouche

Bewildered Youth, a hilarious anti-gay film from the '50s, will be screened Wednesday, Oct. 22, at 8 p.m. at the York Theater as a benefit for the San Francisco CAN/Stop LaRouche campaign. Originally released as The Third Sex, this German film tells the story of Klaus, the son of a wealthy German conservative who is carrying on with Manfred, his artist schoolmate. After learning that the boys have been spending time at the home of a wealthy gay art collector, Klaus' parents take drastic action to set their son straight. Klaus is seduced by the family maid, a scandal breaks for the gay art crowd, and the melodrama becomes increasingly implausible and more and more funny.

Presented by Frameline, sponsor of the annual Lesbian and Gay Film Festival, the benefit will also include a screening of Boys Beware, a '60s educational film instructing young boys how to spot homosexuals, and live entertainment on stage headlining Marga Gomez.

Admission is $7, and advance tickets are available at all Headlines locations.

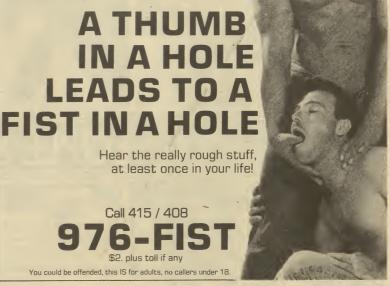

Kay Starr Sings For AIDS

Singer Kay Starr, one of the biggest recording artists of the '40s and '50s, will donate her talents for a special performance at the 7th annual Golden Gate Business Association-sponsored gambling fundraiser 22-OnThe-Red Satuday, Oct. 11, at the Gift-Center Pavillion.

Capping an evening of nonstop Brazilian music and dancing, Starr will perform some of her greatest hits, including "Wheel of Fortune," for which she is best known, along with jazz-oriented contemporary tunes. Starr's longtime arranger and conductor, Frank Ortega, will accompany her on piano and direct her trio.

22-OnThe-Red is expected to raise $100,000 to benefit the San Francisco AIDS Fund, AIDS research and treatment, and the Golden Gate Business Association Foundation. Tickets are $150 for dinner and gambling, or $40 for gambling only. For information and reservations, call $956.8677.

Microcosmic Revelations

by Lauren Ward

We who love the game should agree that pool reflects the players' relationship to their world. A player who feels victimized by their environment will sweat out each game—hoping and battling for one small victory in their life. One who is calm and centered will know serenity in both victory and defeat.

Our community faces life and death challenges every day. It seemed to me that the San Francisco Pool Association was losing its perspective of fun and degenerating into dog-eat-dog competitiveness. I felt our Tues-day night matches had to become more fun than work if the league was to thrive.

'Our community faces life and death challenges every day."

With this in mind, and in my role as the league's Head Referee, I went roving to opening night matches some weeks ago to try to help shift the focus back to friendliness and socializing.

A reflection of this will happen

Saturday, Oct. 11, at El Rio on Mission Street. In the spirit of a truly social afternoon we're putting on a barbeque to honor our league's sponsors. All the SFPA's friends are invited provided you RSVP with the J*O*E-P*O*O*L league line or D.J. at 585-9679 by Thurs., Oct. 9. Let us know if you can bring something to share.

Come Out to the Ballgame

Gay Games move over. Just when you thought the major sporting events of the season were over, out comes an unlikely group of athletes.

Singers, actors, dancers, and directors get a chance to prove their talents aren't only on the stage when Theatre Rhinoceros and The San Francisco Band Foundation play a game of Sizz-ling Softball. The two groups have joined forces for a benefit to help support both organizations

Supervisor Louise Renne will throw out the first ball at 3 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 12, at Lang Field (Gough and Octavia). Along with the players, cheerleaders, hot dogs, and beer, the event will be further enhanced by the appearance of celebrity umpires. Among them: Tom Ammiano, Doris Fish, Tippi, Chris Puccin-nelli, Laurie McBride, Rikki Streicher, and Wayne Friday.
